LETTERS

WRITTEN BY

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE PHILIP DORMER STANHORE, Earl of Chefterfield,

HIS SON,
PHILIP STANHOPE, Efq:
Late Envoy Extraordinary at the Court of DRESDEN.

V.O L. IV.

LETTERS

WRITTEN BY

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE PHILIP DORMER STANHOPE,

Earl of Chesterfield,

T O

HIS SON,
PHILIP STANHOPE, Efg;

Late Envoy Extraordinary at the Court of DRESDEN.

TOGETHER WITH

SEVERAL OTHER PIECES
ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

PUBLISHED FROM THE ORIGINALS BY Mrs. EUGENIA STANHOPE.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

THE NINTH EDITION:

In which are inferted, in their proper Places, feveral Letters that were wanting at the Time of the first Publication.

VOL. IV.

LONDON:
Printed for J. DODSLEY, in PALL-MALL.

M.DCC.LXXXVII.

LORD CHESTERFIELD's

LETTERS.

LETTER CCXCV.

Bath, November the 28th, 1752. MY DEAR FRIEND,

INCE my last to you, I have read Madame Maintenon's letters; I am fure they are genuine, and they both entertained and informed me. They have brought me acquainted with the character of that able and artful lady; whom I am convinced that I now know much better than her directeur the Abbe de Fenelon (afterwards Archbishop of Cambray) did, when he wrote her the 185th letter; and I know him the better too for that letter. The Abbe, though brimful of the divine love, had a great mind to be first Minister, and Cardinal, in order, no doubt, to have an opportunity of doing the more good. His being directeur at that time to Madame Maintenon, seemed to be a good step towards those views. She put herself upon him for a VOL. IV. faint, faint, and he was weak enough to believe it; he, on the other hand, would have put himself upon her for a faint too, which, I dare fay, she did not believe; but both of them knew, that it was necessary for them to appear faints to Lewis the XIV, who they were very fure was a bigot. It is to be prefumed, nay, indeed, it is plain by that 185th letter, that Madame Maintenon had hinted to her diredeur fome scruples of conscience, with relation to her commerce with the King; and which I humbly apprehend to have been only some scruples of prudence, at once to flatter the bigot character, and increase the defires of the King. The pious Abbé, frightened out of his wits lest the King should impute to the direcleur any scruples or difficulties which he might meet with on the part of the Lady, writes her the above-mentioned letter; in which he not only bids her, not teaze the King by advice and exhortations, but to have the utmost submission to his will; and, that she may not mistake the nature of that submisfion, he tells her, it is the same that Sarah had for Abraham; to which submission Isaac perhaps was owing. No bawd could have written a more feducing letter to an innocent country girl, than the directeur did to his penitente; who, I dare fay, had no occasion for his good advice. Those who would justify the good diredeur, alias the pimp, in this affair, must not attempt to do it, by faying, that the King and Madame Maintenon were at that time privately married; that the directeur knew it; and that this was the meaning of his enigme. That is absolutely impossible; for that private marriage must have removed all scruples between the parties; nay, could not have been contracted

b

F

tl

0 fi

d

d

g

ch

fo

tracted upon any other principle, fince it was kept private, and confequently prevented no public scandal. It is therefore extremely evident, that Madame Maintenon could not be married to the king, at the time when she scrupled granting, and when the directeur advised her to grant, those favours which Sarah with so much submission granted to Abraham: and what the directeur is pleased to call le mystere de Dieu, was most evidently a state of concubinage. The letters are well worth your reading; they throw light upon many things of those times.

I have just received a letter from Sir William Stanhope, from Lyons; in which he tells me that he faw you at Paris, that he thinks you a little grown, but that you do not make the most of it, for that you stoop still; d'ailleurs his letter was a panegyric of you.

The young Comte de Schullemburg, the Chambellan whom you knew at Hanover, is come over with the King, et fait auss vos éloges.

Though, as I told you in my last, I have done buying pictures, by way of virtà, yet there are some portraits of remarkable people that would tempt me. For instance, if you could by chance pick up at Paris, at a reasonable price, undoubted originals (whether heads, half lengths, or whole lengths, no matter) of Cardinals Richelieu, Mazarin, and Retz; Monsieur de Turenne, le grand Prince de Condé; Mes dames de Montespan, de Fontanges, de Montbazon, de Sevigné, de Maintenon, de Chevreuse, de Longueville, d'Olonne, &c. I should be tempted to purchase them. I am sensible that they can only be met with, by great accident, at family sales and auctions, so I only mention the affair to you eventually.

t

e at

ened

4 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

I do not understand, or else I do not remember, what affair you mean in your last letter; which you think will come to nothing, and for which, you say, I had once a mind that you should take the road again. Explain it to me.

I shall go to town in four or five days, and carry back with me a little more hearing than I brought: but yet, not half enough for common use. One wants ready pocket money much oftener than one wants great sums; and, to use a very odd expression, I want to hear at sight. I love every-day senses, every-day wit and entertainment; a man who is only good on holydays, is good for very little. Adieu!

LETTER CCXCVI.

Christmas-Day, 1752.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

A Tyrant, with legions at his command, may fay, Oderint mode timeant; though he is a fool if he fays it, and a greater fool if he thinks it. But a private man, who can hurt but few, though he can please many, must endeavour to be loved, for he cannot be feared, in general. Popularity is his only rational and sure soundation. The good will, the affections, the love of the public, can alone raise him to any considerable height. Should you ask me how he is to acquire them, I will answer, by desiring them. No man ever deserved, who did not desire them, and no man both deserved and desired them, who had them not, though many have enjoyed them merely by desiring, and without deserving them.

You

You do not imagine, I believe, that I mean by this public love, the fentimental love of either lovers or intimate friends; no, that is of another nature, and confined to a very narrow circle: but I mean that general good will, which a man may acquire in the world, by the arts of pleafing respectively ex. erted, according to the rank, the fituation, and the turn of mind of those whom he had to do with. The pleasing impressions which he makes upon them, will engage their affections, and their good wishes, and even their good offices, as far (that is) as they are not inconfistent with their own interests; for farther than that you are not to expect from three people in the course of your life, even were it extended to the patriarchal term. Could I revert to the age of twenty, and carry back with me all the experience that forty years more have taught me, I can affure you that I would employ much the greatest part of my time in engaging the good will, and in infinuating myself into the predilection of people in general, instead of directing my endeavours to please (as I was too apt to do) to the man whom I immediately wanted, or the woman I wished for, exclusively of all others. For if one happens (and it will sometimes happen to the ablest man) to fail in his views with that man or that woman; one is at a loss to know who to address one's self to next, having offended in general, by that exclusive and distinguished particular application. I would fecure a general refuge in the good will of the multitude, which is a great strength to any man; for both ministers and mistresses chuse popular and fashionable favourites. A man who folicits a minister, backed by the ge-B 3 neral

e

2

n

.

y

e ſе

e

g

re

n,

m

n.

MC

neral good will and good wishes of mankind, solicits with weight and great probability of fuccess: and a woman is strangely biassed in favour of a man, whom she sees in fashion, and hears every body speak well of. This useful art of infinuation confilts merely of various little things. A graceful motion, a fignificant look, a trifling attention, an obliging word dropped a propos, air, dress, and a thousand other undefinable things, all severally little ones, joined together, make that happy and inestimable composition, the art of pleasing. I have in my life feen many a very handsome woman who has not pleased me, and many very sensible men, who have disgusted me: Why? only for want of these thousand little means to please, which those women, conscious of their beauty, and those men of their fense, have been grossly enough mistaken to neglect. I never was so much in love in my life, as I was with a woman who was very far from being handsome, but then she was made up of graces, and had all the arts of pleafing. The following verses, which I have read in some congratulatory poem prefixed to some work, I have forgot which, express what I mean in favour of what pleases, preferably to what is generally called more folid and instructive.

> I would an author like a mistress try, Not by a nose, a lip, a cheek, or eye, But by some nameless power to give me joy.

Lady Chestersield bids me make you many compliments; she shewed me your letter of recommendation of la Vestris; with which I was very well pleased: there is a pretty turn it it; I wish you would always speak as genteely. I saw another letter from a lady at Paris, in which there was a high panegyrical paragraph concerning you. I wish it were every word of it literally true, but as it comes from a very little, pretty, white hand, which is suspected, and I hope justly, of great partiality to you; il en faut rabattre quelque chose, et même en le faisant il y aura toujours d'assez beaux restes. Adieu.

LETTER CCXCVII.

London, New-Year's-Day, 1753.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

It is now above a fortnight fince I have received a letter from you. I hope, however, that you are well, but engrossed by the business of Lord Albemarle's bureau in the mornings, and by business of a genteeler nature in the evenings; for I willingly give up my own satisfaction to your improvement, either in business or manners.

Here have been lately imported from Paris two gentlemen, who, I find, were much acquainted with you there; Comte Sinzendorf, and Monsieur Clairaut, the Academician. The former is a very pretty man, well-bred, and with a great deal of useful knowledge; for those two things are very consistent. I examined him about you, thinking him a competent judge. He told me, que vous parliez l'Allemand comme un Allemand; que vous sçaviez le droit public de l'Empire parfaitement bien; que vous aviez le goût sur, et des connoissances fort étendues. I told him, that B 4 0 ı

n

k

h

l

t

C

i

I

1

I knew all this very well; but that I wanted to know whether you had l'air, les manieres, les attentions, enfin le brillant d'un bonnête bomme : his answer was, Mais oui en vérité, c'eft fort bien. This, you fee, is but cold, in comparison of what I do wish, and of what you ought to wish. Your friend Clairaut interposed, and faid, Mais je wous affure qu'il est fort poli; to which I answered, Je le crois bien, vis-a-vis des Lapons vos amis; je vous recuse pour Juge, jusqu'à ce que vous aiex été délaponné, au moins dix ans, parmi les bonnêtes gens. These testimonies in your favour are fuch as perhaps you are fatisfied with, and think fusicient: but I am not: they are only the cold depositions of difinterested and unconcerned witnesses, upon a strict examination. When, upon a trial, a man calls witnesses to his character, and those witnesses only say, that they never heard, nor do not know any ill of him; it intimates at best a neutral and infignificant, though innocent character. Now I want, and you ought to endeavour, that les agrémens, les graces, les attentions, &c. should be a diftinguishing part of your character, and specified of you by people unasked. I wish to hear people say of you, ab qu'il est aimable! Quelles manieres, quelles graces, quel art de plaire! Nature, thank God, has given you all the powers necessary; and if she has not yet, I hope in God the will give you the will of exerting them.

I have lately read, with great pleasure, Voltaire's two little Histories of les Croisades, and l'Esprit bumain; which I recommend to your perusal, if you have not already read them. They are bound up with fine

W

iżs

ut

at

d,

to 7-

ce

ni

11 k

-

5,

3

-

t ıl

W

u

n

3

with a most poor performance, called Micromigas, which is faid to be Voltaire's too; but I cannot believe it, it is so very unworthy of him: it confifts only of thoughts stolen from Swift, but miserably mangled and disfigured. But his history of the Croifades shows, in a very short and strong light, the most im. moral and wicked scheme, that was ever contrived by knaves, and executed by madmen and fools against humanity. There is a strange, but never-failing relation between honest madmen and skilful knaves; and wherever one meets with collected numbers of the former, one may be very fure that they are fecretly directed by the latter. The Popes, who have generally been both the ablest and the greatest knaves in Europe, wanted all the power and money of the East: for they had all that was in Europe already. The times and the minds favoured their defign, for they were dark and uninformed; and Peter the Hermit, at once a knave and a madman, was a fine papal tool for so wild and wicked an undertaking. I wish we had good histories of every part of Europe, and indeed of the world, written upon the plan of Voltaire's de l'Esprit bumain ; for, I own, I am provoked at the contempt which most historians show for humanity in general; one would think by them, that the whole human species confisted but of about a hundred and fifty people, called and dignified (commonly very undefervedly too) by the titles of Emperors, Kings, Popes, Generals, and Ministers.

I have never seen in any of the news-papers, any mention of the affairs of the Cevennes, or Grenoble, which you gave me an account of some time ago; and the Duke de Mirepoix pretends, at least, to know nothing of either. Were they false reports; or does the French Court chuse to stifle them? I hope that they are both true, because I am very willing, that the cares of the French government should be employed and confined to themfelves.

Your friend, the Electress Palatine, has sent me fix wild boars heads, and other pièces de sa chasse, in return for the sans, which she approved of extremely. This present was signified to me by one Mr. Harold, who wrote me a letter in very indifferent English; I suppose he is a Dane, who has been in England.

Mr. Harte came to town yesterday, and dined with me to day. We talked you over; and I can assure you, that though a Parson, and no member du beau monde, he thinks all the most shining accomplishments of it full as necessary for you, as I do. His expression was, that is all that be wants; but if he wants that, considering his situation and destination, he might as well want every thing else.

This is the day when people reciprocally offer and receive the kindest and the warmest wishes, though, in general, without meaning them on one side, or believing them on the other. They are formed by the head, in compliance with custom, though disavowed by the heart, in consequence of nature. His wishes upon this occasion are the best, that are the best turned; you do not, I am sure, doubt the truth of mine, and therefore I will express them with a Quaker-like simplicity. May this new year be a very new one indeed to you; may you put off the old, and put on the new man! but I mean the outward, not the inward man.

m

m

W

la

y

0

y

fr

2

n

V

I

W

al

fo

W

h

C

man. With this alteration, I might justly sum up all my wishes for you in these words, 5;

I

n-

n.

ne

in

y.

d,

1;

g-

th

re

au

ts

n

t.

:11

d

h,

2-

e

d es

1-

e, ie ie ie

1.

Dii tibi dent annos, de te nam cætera sumes.

This minute, I receive your letter of the 26th past, which gives me a very disagreeable reason for your late silence. By the symptoms which you mention of your illness, I both hope and believe, that it was wholly owing to your own want of care. You are rather inclined to be fat, you have naturally a good stomach, and you eat at the best tables; which must of course make you plethoric: and, upon my word, you will be subject to these accidents, if you will not from time to time, when you find yourfelf full, heated, or your head aching, take some little easy preventive purge, that would not confine you; fuch as chewing a little rhubarb, when you go to bed at night, or some senna-tea in the morning. You do very well to live extremely low, for some time; and I could wish, though I do not expect it, that you would take one gentle vomit: for those giddinesses, and swimmings in the head, always proceed from fome foulness of the stomach. However, upon the whole, I am very glad that your old complaint has not mixed itself with this: which, I am fully convinced, arises singly from your own negligence. Adieu.

I am forry for Monsieur Kurzé, upon his sister's account.

LETTER CCXCVIII.

London, January the 15th, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

NEVER think my time fo well employed, as when I think it employed to your advantage. You have long had the greatest share of it; you now engross it. The moment is now decisive; the piece is going to be exhibited to the public; the mere out-lines, and the general colouring are not fufficient to attract the eyes, and to secure applause; but the last finishing, artful, and delicate strokes, are necessary. Skilful judges will discern, and acknowledge their merit; the ignorant will, without knowing why, feel their power. In that view, I have thrown together, for your use, the enclosed Maxims ; or, to speak more properly, observations on men and things; for I have no merit as to the invention: I am no fystem-monger; and, instead of giving way to my imagination, I have only confulted my memory; and my conclusions are all drawn from facts. not from fancy. Most maxim-mongers have preferred the prettiness to the justness of a thought, and the turn to the truth; but I have refused myself to every thing that my own experience did not justify and confirm. I wish you would consider them ferioufly, and feparately, and recur to them again pro re nata in fimilar cases. Young men are as apt to think themselves wise enough, as drunken men are to think themselves sober enough. They look upon spirit to be a much better thing than experience; g a

n

0

0

t

. Turn to the end of the volume.

which they call coldness. They are but half mistaken; for though spirit, without experience, is dangerous, experience, without spirit, is languid and Their union, which is very rare, is perfection: you may join them, if you please; for all my experience is at your service; and I do not desire one grain of your spirit in return. Use them both; and let them reciprocally animate and check each I mean here, by the spirit of youth, only the vivacity and presumption of youth; which hinder them from seeing the difficulties, or dangers of an undertaking; but I do not mean what the filly vulgar call spirit, by which they are captious, jealous of their-rank, suspicious of being undervalued, and tart (as they call it) in their repartees, upon the flightest occasions. This is an evil, and a very filly spirit, which should be driven out, and transferred to an herd of swine. This is not the spirit of a man of fashion, who has kept good company. People of an ordinary, low education, when they happen to fall into good company, imagine themselves the only object of its attention; if the company whispers, it is, to be fure, concerning them; if they laugh, it is at them; and if any thing ambiguous, that by the most forced interpretation can be applied to them, happens to be faid, they are convinced that it was meant at them; upon which they grown out of countenance first, and then angry. This mistake is very well ridiculed in the Stratagem, where Scrub fays, I am sure they talked of me, for they laughed consumedly. A well-bred man seldom thinks, but never seems to think, himself slighted, undervalued, or laughed at in company, unless where it is so plainly marked out,

53-

ge. ow

ffife; es,

acout

nd n:

ele,

ernd

to fy

to

to

e;

ch

14 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

out, that his honour obliges him to refent it in a proper manner; mais les bonnêtes gens ne se boudent jamais. I will admit that it is very difficult to command one's-felf enough, to behave with ease, frankness, and good-breeding towards those, who one knows diflike, flight, and injure one as far as they can without personal consequences; but I affert, that it is absolutely necessary to do it : you must embrace the man you hate, if you cannot be justified in knocking him down; for otherwise you avow the injury, which you cannot revenge. A prudent Cuckold (and there are many fuch at Paris) pockets his horns, when he cannot gore with them; and will not add to the triumph of his maker, by only butting with them ineffectually. A feeming ignorance is very often a most necessary part of worldly knowledge. It is, for instance, commonly advisable to seem ignorant of what people offer to tell you; and, when they fay, Have you not heard of fuch a thing? to answer, No, and to let them go on; though you know it already. Some have a pleasure in telling it, because they think that they tell it well; others have a pride in it, as being the fagacious discoverers; and many have a vanity in showing that they have been, though very undeservedly, trusted : all these would be disappointed, and consequently displeased, if you faid, Yes. Seem always ignorant (unless to one most intimate friend) of all matters of private scandal and defamation, though you should hear them a thousand times; for the parties affected always look upon the receiver to be almost as bad as the thief: and, whenever they become the topic of conversation, seem to be a sceptic, though you are really rea ten fho inf of vai the no be pa H for an di gu for off ha kn th m

for an we to al di

te Po

le

a ent

n-

k-

ne

ey

at

ce

ky, ld

S,

to

th

ry

e.

3-

n

to

u

g

23

;

e

١,

0

e

r

e

really a ferious believer; and always take the extenuating part. But all this feeming ignorance should be joined to thorough and extensive private informations: and, indeed, it is the best method of procuring them; for most people have such a vanity, in shewing a superiority over others, though but for a moment, and in the mereft trifles, that they will tell you what they should not, rather than not show that they can tell what you did not know: besides that such seeming ignorance will make you pass for incurious, and consequently undefigning. However, fish for facts, and take pains to be well informed of every thing that passes; but fish judiciously, and not always, nor indeed often, in the shape of direct questions; which always put people upon their guard, and, often repeated, grow tiresome. fometimes take the things that you would know, for granted; upon which somebody will, kindly and officiously, fet you right: sometimes say, that you have heard fo and fo; and at other times feem to know more than you do, in order to know all that you want: but avoid direct questioning, as much as you can. All these necessary arts of the world require constant attention, presence of mind, and coolness. Achilles, though invulnerable, never went to battle but compleatly armed. Courts are to be the theatres of your wars, where you should be always as completely armed, and even with the addition of a heel-piece. The least inattention, the least distraction, may prove fatal. I would fain see you what pedants call omnis homo, and what Pope much better calls all-accomplished: you have the means in your power; add the will, and you may bring it about. The The vulgar have a coarse saying, of spoiling a bog for an balfpenny-worth of tar: prevent the application, by providing the tar; it is very easily to be had, in comparison with what you have already got.

The fine Mrs. Pitt, who, it feems, faw you often at Paris, speaking of you the other day, said, in French, for she speaks little English — — whether it is that you did not pay the homage due to her beauty, or that it did not firike you as it does others, I cannot determine; but I hope she had some other reason than truth, for saying it. I will suppose that you did not care a pin for her; but, however, the furely deferved a degree of propitiatory adoration from you, which I am afraid you neglected. Had I been in your case, I should have endeavoured, at least, to have supplanted Mr. Mackay in his office of nocturnal reader to her. I played at cards, two days ago, with your friend, Mrs. Fitzgerald, and her most sublime mother, Mrs. Seagrave; they both inquired after you: and Mrs. Fitzgerald faid, she hoped you went on with your dancing; I faid Yes, and that you affured me, you had made such confiderable improvements in it, that you had now learned to stand still, and even upright. Your virtuesa, la Signora Vestri, sung here the other day, with great applause: I presume you are intimately acquainted with her merit. Good night to you, whoever you pass it with.

I have this moment received a packet, sealed with your seal, though not directed by your hand, for Lady Hervey. No letter from you! Are you not well?

pa

bu

W

wi

ta

CC

th

is

t

2

LETTER CCXCIX.

or

in

en

in

0 :3

2

c

n

I

London, May the 27th, O. S. 1753. MY DEAR FRIEND.

Have this day been tired, jaded, nay tormented, by the company of a most worthy, sensible, and learned man, a near relation of mine, who dined and passed the evening with me. This seems a paradox, but is a plain truth: he has no knowledge of the world, no manners, no address: far from talking without book, as is commonly faid of people who talk fillily, he only talks by book; which, in general conversation, is ten times worse. He has formed in his own closet, from books, certain systems of every thing, argues tenaciously upon those principles, and is both surprised and angry at whatever deviates from them. His theories are good, but, unfortunately, are all impracticable. Why? because he has only read, and not conversed. He is acquainted with books, and an absolute stranger to men. Labouring with his matter, he is delivered of it with pangs; he hefitates, stops in his utterance, and always expresses himself inelegantly. His actions are all ungraceful; fo that, with all his merit and knowledge, I would rather converse fix hours with the most frivolous tittle-tattle woman, who knew fomething of the world, than with him. The prepofterous notions of a systematical man, who does not know the world, tire the patience of a man who does. It would be endless to correct his mistakes, nor would he take it kindly; for he has confidered every thing deliberately, and is very fure that he is in the right. Impropriety

Impropriety is a characteristic, and a never-failing one, of these people. Regardless, because ignorant, of custom and manners, they violate them every They often shock, though they never mean to offend; never attending either to the general character, or the particular distinguishing circumstances of the people to whom, or before whom they talk; whereas the knowledge of the world teaches one, that the very fame things, which are exceedingly right and proper in one company, time, and place, are exceedingly absurd in others. In short, a man who has great knowledge, from experience and observation, of the characters, customs, and manners of mankind, is a being as different from, and as superior to a man of mere book and fystematical knowledge, as a well-managed horse is to an ass. Study therefore, cultivate, and frequent men and women; not only in their outward, and confequently guarded, but in their interior, domestic, and consequently less disguised, characters and manners. Take your notions of things, as by observation and experience you find they really are, and not as you read that they are or should be; for they never are quite what they should be. For this purpose, do not content yourself with general and common acquaintance; but, wherever you can, establish yourfelf, with a kind of domestic familiarity, in good houses. For instance, go again to Orli, for two or three days, and so at two or three reprises. Go and flay two or three days at a time at Verfailles, and improve and extend the acquaintance you have there. Be at home at St. Cloud; and, whenever any private person of fashion invites you to pass a few days days This and : for e they own ful : ners vul low bia ing gai ne ab 25 A of ar

in ri

W d

D

iling ant, very ever gecirhom orld are me, In exms. ent ind is ent nd ic. n-72ot ey rnh bd or d -

.

V

days at his country-house, accept of the invitation. This will necessarily give you a versatility of mind, and a facility to adopt various manners and customs; for every body defires to please those in whose house they are; and people are only to be pleased in their own way. Nothing is more engaging than a chearful and easy conformity to people's particular manners, habits, and even weaknesses; nothing (to use a vulgar expression) should come amis to a young fellow. He should be, for good purposes, what Alcibiades was commonly for bad ones, a Proteus, assuming with ease, and wearing with chearfulness, any shape. Heat, cold, luxury, abstinence, gravity, gaiety, ceremony, easiness, learning, trifling, business, and pleasure, are modes which he should be able to take, lay aside, or change occasionally, with as much ease as he would take or lay aside his hat. All this is only to be acquired by use and knowledge of the world, by keeping a great deal of company, analyfing every character, and infinuating yourfelf into the familiarity of various acquaintance. right, a generous ambition to make a figure in the world, necessarily gives the defire of pleafing; the defire of pleafing points out, to a great degree, the means of doing it; and the art of pleasing is, in truth, the art of rising, of distinguishing one's-self, of making a figure and a fortune in the world. But without pleafing, without the Graces, as I have told you a thousand times, ogni fatica è vana. You are now but nineteen, an age at which most of your countrymen are illiberally getting drunk in Port, at the University. You have greatly got the start of them in learning; and, if you can equally get the

LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

fart of them in the knowledge and manners of the world, you may be very fure of outrunning them in Court and Parliament, as you fet out so much earlier than they. They generally begin but to fee the world at one-and-twenty; you will by that age have feen all Europe. They fet out upon their travels unlicked cubs; and in their travels they only lick one another, for they feldom go into any other company. They know nothing but the English world, and the worst part of that too, and generally very little of any but the English language; and they come home, at three or four-and-twenty, refined and polished (as is faid in one of Congreve's plays) like Dutch skippers from a whale-fishing. The care which has been taken of you, and (to do you justice) the care you have taken of yourfelf, has left you, at the age of nineteen only, nothing to acquire but the knowledge of the world, manners, address, and those exterior accomplishments. But they are great and necessary acquisitions, to those who have sense enough to know their true value; and your getting them before you are one-and-twenty, and before you enter upon the active and shining scene of life, will give you fuch an advantage over all your cotemporaries, that they cannot overtake you: they must be distanced. You may probably be placed about a young Prince, who will probably be a young King. There all the various arts of pleasing, the engaging address, the versatility of manners, the brillant, the Graces, will outweigh and yet outrun all folid knowledge and unpolished merit. Oil yourself therefore, and be both supple and shining, for that race, if and best chil par Rat ing bon ple ain hi an CU ce ri

w

m ir

0

C

u

you. will the nem uch fee age vels one ny. the of me. (as iphas are ige. W-Xegh eter VC es, if-

ng

re dne ve, if

4

you would be first, or early, at the goal. Ladies will most probably too, have something to say there; and those who are best with them, will probably be best somewhere else. Labour this great point, my dear child, indefatigably; attend to the very smallest parts, the minutest graces, the most trifling circum-Rances, that can possibly concur in forming the shining character of a complete Gentleman, un galant bomme, un bomme de cour, a man of business and pleasure; estimé des bommes, recherché des femmes, aimé de tout le monde. In this view, observe the faining part of every man of fashion, who is liked and esteemed; attend to, and imitate that particular accomplishment for which you hear him chiefly celebrated and diftinguished: then collect those various parts, and make yourfelf a Mosaic of the whole. No one body possesses every thing, and almost every body possesses some one thing worthy of imitation: only chuse your models well; and, in order to do so, chuse by your ear more than by your eye. The best model is always that which is most universally allowed to be the best, though in strictness it may possibly not be so. We must take most things as they are, we cannot make them what we would, nor often what they should be; and, where moral duties are not concerned, it is more prudent to follow, than to attempt to lead. Adieu.

LETTER CCC.

Bath, October the 3d, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

7 OU have fet out well at the Hague; you are in love with Madame Munter, which I am very glad of: you are in the fine company there, and I hope one of it; for it is not enough at your age, to be merely in good company; but you should, by your address and attentions, make that good company think you one of them. There is a tribute due to beauty, even independently of farther views; which tribute I hope you paid with alacrity to Madame Munter and Madame Degenfeldt : depend upon it they expected it, and were offended in proportion as that tribute feemed either unwillingly or fcantily paid. I believe my friend Kreuningen admits nobody now to his table, for fear of their communicating the plague to him, or at least the bite of a mad dog. Pray profit of the entrées libres, that the French Embassador has given you; frequent him, and speak to him. I think you will not do amiss to call upon Mr. Burrish, at Aix la Chapelle, fince it is fo little out of your way; and you will do ftill better, if you would, which I know you will not, drink those waters, for five or fix days only, to fcour your flomach and bowels a little; I am fure it would do you a great deal of good. Mr. Burrish can doubtless give you the best letters to Munich; and he will naturally give you some to Comte Preyling, or Comte Sinsheim, and such fort of grave people; but I could wish that you would ask him for some to young fellows of pleasure, or fashionable coquettes, geft r Yo Muni two cle a fider I fan your and : heim or M heim only can in a eigh whil con the and Thi trac infi only all 1 gui mil vifi nef that il

A progreat

that you may be dans l'honnête débauche de Munich. A propos of your future motions; I leave you in a great measure the master of them, so shall only suggest my thoughts to you upon that subject.

You have three Electoral Courts in view, Bonn. Munich, and Manheim. I would advise you to see two of them rather curforily, and fix your tabernacle at the third, whichever that may be, for a considerable time. For instance, should you chuse (as I fancy you will) to make Manheim the place of your residence, stay only ten or twelve days at Bonn, and as long at Munich, and then go and fix at Manheim: and fo, vice verfa, if you should like Bonn or Munich better than you think you would Manheim; make that the place of your residence, and only visit the other two. It is certain that no man can be much pleased himself, or please others much, in any place where he is only a bird of passage for eight or ten days; neither party thinking it worth while to make an acquaintance, still less to form any connection, for fo short a time: but when months are the case, a man may domesticate himself pretty well; and very foon not be looked upon as a stranger. This is the real utility of travelling, when, by contracting a familiarity at any place, you get into the inside of it, and see it in its undress. That is the only way of knowing the customs, the manners, and all the little characteristical peculiarities, that distinguish one place from another: but then this familiarity is not to be brought about by cold, formal visits of half an hour: no; you must show a willingness, a defire, an impatience, of forming connections, il faut s'y prêter, et y mettre du liant, du désir de plaire.

753.

re in very and age, ould, com-

Maipon ition ntily

ews :

of a the

s to e it ftill

not,

ould can and

ng, le;

e to

hat

24 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTERS

Whatever you do approve, you must be lavish in your praises of; and you must learn to commend what you do not approve of, if it is approved of there. You are not much given to praise, I know; but it is because you do not yet know how extremely people are engaged by a feeming fanction to their own opinions, prejudices, and weaknesses, even in the merest trifles. Our self love is mortified, when we think our opinions, and even our taftes, customs, and dresses, either arraigned or condemned; as, on the contrary, it is tickled and flattered by approbation. I will give you a remarkable instance of this The famous Earl of Shaftesbury, in the flagitious reign of Charles the Second, while he was Chancellor, had a mind to be a Favourite, as well as a Minister of the King: in order therefore to please His Majesty, whose prevailing passion was women, my Lord kept a w-e, whom he had no occasion for, and made no manner of use of. The King soon heard of it, and asked him if it was true; he owned it was; but that, though he kept that one woman, he had several others besides, for he loved variety. A few days afterwards, the King, at his public levee, faw Lord Shaftesbury at some distance, and said in the circle, " One would not think that that little, weak " man is the greatest whore-master in England; but "I can affure you that he is." Upon Lord Shaftefbury's coming into the circle, there was a general fmile; the king faid, " This is concerning you, my "Lord." "Me, Sir!" answered the Chancellor, with fome furprize. "Yes, you," answered the King; "for I had just said, that you were the " greatest whore-master in England: Is it not " true ?"

tel thi of

is wi

for pla ne to fed

A

on lar

th

() fo

are or ma in

be

of 1:

ly

ir

in

en

ıs,

on 12-nis

2-ras

25 afe

n.

or.

on

ed he

he ak

ut

ef-

ral

my

or,

the

the

not

3,,

" Of a subject, Sir," replied Lord Shaftesbury, " perhaps I am." It is the same in every thing; we think a difference of opinion, of conduct, of manners, a tacit reproach, at least, upon our own; we must therefore use ourselves to a ready conformity to whatever is neither criminal nor dishonourable. Whoever differs from any general custom, is supposed both to think, and proclaim himself wifer than the rest of the world; which the rest of the world cannot bear, especially in a young man. A young fellow is always forgiven, and often applauded, when he carries a fashion to an excess; but never if he stops short of it. The first is ascribed to youth and fire; but the latter is imputed to an affectation of fingularity, or superiority. At your age, one is allowed to outrer fashion, dress, vivacity, gallantry, &c. but by no means to be behind hand in any one of them. And one may apply to youth in this cafe, Si non erraffet, fecerat ille minus. Adieu.

LETTER CCCI.

Bath, October the 19th, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

OF all the various ingredients that compose the useful and necessary art of pleasing, no one is so effectual and engaging, as that gentleness, that douceur of countenance and manners, to which you are no stranger, though (God knows why) a sworn enemy. Other people take great pains to conceal, or disguise their natural impersections; some, by the make of their clothes, and other arts, endeavour to Vol. IV.

conceal the defects of their shape; women, who unfortunately have natural bad complexions, lay on good ones; and both men and women, upon whom unkind nature has inflicted a furliness and ferocity of countenance, do at least all they can, though often without fuccess, to soften and mitigate it; they affect douceur, and aim at smiles, though often in the attempt, like the Devil in Milton, they grin borribly, a ghafily smile. But you are the only person I ever knew, in the whole course of my life, who not only disdain, but absolutely reject and disguise a great advantage that nature has kindly granted. You easily guess I mean countenance; for she has given you a very pleasing one; but you beg to be excused, you will not accept it; on the contrary, take fingular pains to put on the most funeste, forbidding, and unpleasing one, that can possibly be imagined. This one would think impossible; but you know it to be true. If you imagine that it gives you a manly, thoughtful, and decisive air, as some, though very few of your countrymen do, you are most exceedingly mistaken; for it is at best the air of a German corporal, part of whose exercise is to look fierce, and to blasemeer-op. You will fay, perhaps, What am I always to be studying my countenance, in order to wear this douceur? I answer, No, do it but for a fortnight, and you will never have occasion to think of it more. Take but half the pains to recover the countenance that nature gave you, that you must have taken to disguise and deform it as you have, and the bufiness will be done. Accustom your eyes to a certain foftness, of which they are very capable, and your face to fmiles, which become it more than most faces

1

N

W

h

C

2

0

e

n

b

di

n

£

e

y , er

y

1-

ly

a

u

ar

nd nis

be

ly,

ry

dan

ce,

nat

der ra nk

the

uft

and o a nost

ic es

faces I know. Give all your motions too, an air of douceur, which is directly the reverse of their present celerity and rapidity. I wish you would adopt a little of l'air du Couvent (you very well know what I mean) to a certain degree; it has fomething extremely engaging; there is a mixture of benevolence, affection, and unction in it: it is frequently really fincere, but it is almost always thought so, and confequently pleasing. Will you call this trouble? It will not be half an hour's trouble to you in a week's time. But suppose it be, pray tell me, why did you give yourself the trouble of learning to dance so well as you do? It is neither a religious, moral, or civil duty. You must own, that you did it then fingly to please, and you were in the right on't. Why do you wear fine clothes, and curl your hair? Both are troublesome; lank locks, and plain flimfy rags, are much easier. This then you also do in order to please, and you do very right. But then, for God's fake, reason and act consequentially; and endeavour to please in other things too, still more essential; and without which the trouble you have taken in those is wholly thrown away. You show your dancing, perhaps, fix times a year, at most; but you show your countenance, and your common motions every day. and all day. Which then, I appeal to yourfelf, ought you to think of the most, and care to render easy, graceful, and engaging? Douceur of countenance and gesture, can alone make them so. You are by no means ill-natured; and would you then most unjustly be reckoned so? Yet your common countenance intimates, and would make any body, who did not know you, believe it. A propos of this; I . C 2 must must tell you what was said the other day to a fine lady whom you know, who is very good-natured in truth, but whose common countenance implies illnature, even to brutality. It was Miss H-n, Lady M-y's niece, whom you have feen both at Blackheath and at Lady Hervey's. Lady M-y was faying to me, that you had a very engaging countenance when you had a mind to it, but that you had not always that mind; upon which Miss H-n faid, that she liked your countenance best, when it was as glum as her own. Why then, replied Lady M-y, you two should marry; for, while you both wear your worst countenances, nobody else will venture upon either of you; and they call her now Mrs. Stanhope. complete this douceur of countenance and motions, which I fo earnestly recommend to you, you should carry it also to your expressions, and manner of thinking, mettez y toujours de l'affectueux, de l'onction; take the gentle, the favourable, the indulgent fide of most questions. I own that the manly and sublime John Trott, your countryman, seldom does: but, to show his spirit and decision, takes the rough and harsh side, which he generally adorns with an oath, to feem more formidable. This he only thinks fine; for to do John justice, he is commonly as good-natured as any body. These are among the many little things which you have not, and I have lived long enough in the world to know of what infinite consequence they are, in the course of life. Reason then, I repeat it again, within yourself confequentially; and let not the pains you have taken, and still take, to please in some things, be à ture perte, by your negligence of, and inattention to others,

f

P

q

is

re

li

n

te

uí

au

to

CO

Pa

e

t

y

-

d

15

u ft

er

0

S, ld

of

:

le

b-

s ;

z h

an ks

as

he

ve

n-

fe.

Se-

n,

à

to

rs,

others, of much less trouble, and much more confequence.

I have been of late much engaged, or rather bewildered, in Oriental history, particularly that of the Jews, fince the destruction of their temple, and their dispersion by Titus; but the confusion and uncertainty of the whole, and the monftrous extravagancies and falsehoods of the greatest part of it, difgusted me extremely. Their Thalmud, their Mischna, their Targums, and other traditions and writings of their Rabbins and Doctors, who were most of them Cabalists, are really more extravagant and abfurd, if possible, than all that you have read in Comte de Gabalis; and indeed most of his stuff is taken from them. Take this fample of their nonsense, which is transmitted in the writings of one of their most considerable Rabbins. "One Abas Saul, a man of ten feet high, was digging a grave, and happened to find the eye of Goliath, in which he thought proper to bury himself, and so he did, all but his head, which the Giant's eye was unfortunately not quite deep enough to receive." This, I affure you, is the most modest lie of ten thousand. I have also read the Turkish History, which, excepting the religious part, is not fabulous, though very possibly not true. For the Turks, having no notion of letters, and being, even by their religion, forbid the use of them, except for reading and transcribing the Koran; they have no historians of their own, nor any authentic records or memorials for other historians to work upon; fo that what histories we have of that country, are written by foreigners; as Platina, Sir Paul Rycaut, Prince Cantemir, &c. or else snatches only of particular and short periods, by some who happened to refide there at those times: fuch as Busbequius, whom I have just finished. I like him, as far as he goes, much the best of any of them : but then his account is, properly, only an account of his own embasty, from the Emperor Charles the Vth to Solyman the Magnificent. However, there he gives, episodically, the best account I know, of the customs and manners of the Turks, and of the nature of that government, which is a most extraordinary one. For, despotic as it always seems, and fometimes is, it is in truth a military republic; and the real power refides in the Janissaries; who sometimes order their Sultan to strangle his Vizir, and fometimes the Vizir to depose or strangle his Sultan, according as they happen to be angry at the one or the other. I own, I am glad that the capital strangler should, in his turn, be strangle-able, and now and then strangled; for I know of no brute so fierce, nor criminal so guilty, as the creature called a Sovereign, whether King, Sultan, or Sophy, who thinks himself, either by divine or human right, vested with an absolute power of destroying his fellow-creatures; or who, without inquiring into his right, lawlefsly exerts that power. The most excusable of all those human monflers, are the Turks, whose religion teaches them inevitable fatalism. A propos of the Turks; my Loyola, I pretend, is superior to your Sultan. Perhaps you think this impossible, and wonder who this Loyola is. Know then, that I have had a Barbet brought me from France, so exactly like Sultan, that he has been mistaken for him feveral times; only his fnout is shorter, and his ears longer lo ki he ha cl

hi hi th St

ea w alit I in wi

Pl bo

m

bu

let

0 29

n,

1 3

nt

ne

re

of

he

r-

be bi

end

n,

or

er

nd

e,

re-

ks

ith s; sly

ofe

the

our ave

fly

im

ars

ger

longer than Sultan's. He has also the acquired knowledge of Sultan; and I am apt to think that he studied under the same master at Paris. His habit, and his white band, show him to be an Ecclesiastic; and his begging, which he does very earnestly, proves him to be of a Mendicant order; which, added to his stattery and infinuation, make him supposed to be a Jesuit, and have acquired him the name of Loyola. I must not omit too, that, when he breaks wind, he smells exactly like Sultan.

I do not yet hear one jot the better for all my bathings and pumpings, though I have been here already full half my time; I consequently go very little into company, being very little fit for any. I hope you keep company enough for us both; you will get more by that, than I shall by all my reading. I read fingly to amuse myself, and fill up my time, of which I have too much; but you have two much better reasons for going into company, Pleasure and Profit. May you find a great deal of both, in a great deal of company! Adieu.

LETTER CCCII.

London, November the 20th, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have no letter from you to acknowledge; but that, you know by long experience, does not hinder my writing to you: I always receive your letters with pleasure; but I mean, and endeavour,

C 4

that

that you should receive mine with some profit; preferring always your advantage to my own pleasure.

If you find yourself well settled and naturalized at Manheim, stay there some time, and do not leave a certain for an uncertain good: but if you think you shall be as well, or better established at Munich, go there as soon as you please; and if disappointed, you can always return to Manheim. I mentioned, in a former letter, your passing the Carnival at Berlin, which I think may be both useful and pleasing to you; however, do as you will; but let me know what you resolve. That King and that country have, and will have, so great a share in the assairs of Europe, that they are well worth being thoroughly known.

Whether, where you are now, or ever may be hereafter, you speak French, German, or English most, I earnestly recommend to you a particular attention to the propriety and elegancy of your style: employ the best words you can find in the language, avoid cacophony, and make your periods as harmonious as you can. I need not, I am fure, tell you, what you must often have felt, how much the elegancy of diction adorns the best thoughts, and palliates the worst. In the House of Commons, it is almost every thing; and indeed, in every assembly, whether public or private. Words, which are the dress of thoughts, deserve surely more care than clothes, which are only the dress of the person, and which, however, ought to have their share of attention. If you attend to your style, in any one language, it will give you an habit of attending to it in every other; and if once you speak either French or ( mu aga who par now nef mai the Wh we pla her wo inte nig

1 der

onl

les

A.

to

pil

pe

del

Ba

re-

red

ave

nk

ch,

ed,

ed.

er-

af-

me

try

of

hly

be ish atle:

ge,

u.

le-

al-

is

ly,

he

an

nd

n-

ın-

it

ch

or

or German very elegantly, you will afterwards speak much the better English for it. I repeat it to you again, for at least the thousandth time; exert your whole attention now in acquiring the ornamental parts of character. People know very little of the world, and talk nonfense, when they talk of plainness and folidity unadorned; they will do in nothing: mankind has been long out of a state of nature, and the golden age of native simplicity will never return. Whether for the better or the worfe, no matter; but we are refined; and plain manners, plain dress, and plain diction, would as little do in life, as acorns, herbage; and the water of the neighbouring fpring. would do at table. Some people are just come, who interrupt me in the middle of my fermon; fo good night.

LETTER CCCIII.

London, November the 26th, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

FINE doings at Manheim! If one may give credit to the weekly histories of Monsieur Roderigue, the finest writer among the moderns; not only des chasses brillantes et nombreuses, des opéras ou les acteurs se surpassent, les jours des Saints de L. A. A. E. E. sérénissimes célébrés en grand gala; but, to crown the whole, Monsieur Zuchmantel is happily arrived, and Monsieur Wartensleben hourly expected. I hope that you are pars magna of all these delights; though, as Noll Bluff says, in the Old Batchelor, that rascally Gazetteer takes no more notice.

of you, than if you were not in the land of the living. I should think, that he might at least have taken notice, that in those rejoicings you appeared with a rejoicing, and not a gloomy countenance; and you distinguished yourself, in that numerous and shining company, by your air, dress, address, and attentions. If this was the case, as I will both hope and suppose that it was, I will, if you require it, have him written to, to do you justice in his next supplement. Seriously, I am very glad that you are whirled in that tourbillon of pleasures; they smooth, polish, and rub off rough corners: perhaps too, you have some particular collision, which is still more effectual.

Schannat's History of the Palatinate was, I find, written originally in German, in which language, I suppose, it is that you have read it; but, as I must humbly content myself with the French translation, Vaillant has fent for it for me, from Holland, fo that I have not yet read it. While you are in the Palatinate, you do very well to read every thing relative to it; you will do still better if you make that reading the foundation of your inquiries into the more minute circumstances and anecdotes of that country, whenever you are in company with informed and knowing people.

The Ministers here, intimidated by the absurd and groundless clamours of the mob, have, very weakly in my mind, repealed, this fession, the bill which they had passed in the last, for rendering Jews capable of being naturalized, by subsequent acts of parliament. The clamourers triumph, and will doubtless make farther demands; which, if not granted, this piece of complaifance will foon be forgotten. Nothing is true crai able fear the pla wit aga fpi. civ op > do is the by ha bu fre re th nu in be P e fo

> > 1

to

truez

. T

noth a

you

ning

ons.

pose vrit-

Se-

that rub

irti-

ind,

e, I

ion,

l, fo

the

re-

that ore

try,

and

hey

e of

ent. ake

iece

g is uez

truer in politics, than this reflection of the Cardinal de Retz, Que le peuple craint toujours quand on ne le craint pas; and confequently they grow unreason able and insolent, when they find that they are feared. Wise and honest governors will never, if they can help it, give the people just cause to complain; but then, on the other hand, they will firmly withstand groundless clamour. Besides that this noise against the Jew bill proceeds from that narrow mobspirit of intoleration in religious, and inhospitality in civil matters; both which all wise governments should oppose.

The confusion in France increases daily, as no doubt you are informed, where you are. There is an answer of the Clergy's to the remonstrances of the Parliament, lately published; which was sent me by the last post from France, and which I would have fent you, enclosed in this, were it not too Very probably you may fee it at Manheim, from the French Minister: it is very well worth your reading, being most artfully and plausibly written. though founded upon false principles; the jus divinum of the Clergy, and consequently their supremacy in all matters of faith and doctrine, are afferted; both which I absolutely deny. Were those two points allowed the Clergy of any country- whatfoever, they must necessarily govern that country abfolutely; every thing being, directly or indirectly, relative to faith or doctrine; and whoever is supposed to have the power of faving and damning fouls, to all eternity, (which power the Clergy pretend to) will be much more considered, and better obeyed, than any civil power, that forms no pretentions be-C 6 yond yond this world. Whereas, in truth, the Clergy in every country are, like all other subjects, dependent upon the supreme legislative power; and are appointed by that power, under whatever restrictions and limitations it pleases, to keep up decency and decorum in the church, just as constables are to keep peace in the parish. This Fra. Paolo has clearly proved, even upon their own principles of the old and New Testament, in his book de Beneficiis, which I recommend to you to read with attention; it is short. Adieu!

LETTER CCCIV.

London, December the 25th, 1753.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Y Esterday again I received two letters at once from you, the one of the 7th, the other of the 15th, from Manheim.

You never had in your life so good a reason for not writing, either to me or to any body else, as your sore singer lately surnished you. I believe it was painful, and I am glad it is cured; but a sore singer, however painful, is a much lesser evil than laziness, of either body or mind, and attended by sewer ill consequences.

I am very glad to hear that you were distinguished at the Court of Manheim, from the rest of your countrymen and fellow-travellers: it is a sign that you had better manners and address than they; for take it for granted, the best-bred people will always be the best received, wherever they go. Good-manners com both lity reall Cou mon anti belie ing take you to f qui for pol not niff accome be of Ho yo ten

CO

Li

ca

ftra

in ent

ap-

ons

ind

to

ar-

blo ich

is

:3.

ce

he

ot

ur

as

er,

fs,

ill

ed

ur

at

or ys.

n-

ners are the settled medium of social, as specie is of commercial life; returns are equally expected for both; and people will no more advance their civility to a Bear, than their money to a Bankrupt. really both hope, and believe, that the German Courts will do you a great deal of good; their ceremony and restraint being the proper correctives, and antidotes, for your negligence and inattention. I believe they would not greatly relish your weltering in your own laziness, and an easy chair; nor take it very kindly, if, when they spoke to you, or you to them, you looked another way; as much as to fay, kiss my b-h. As they give, so they require attention; and, by the way, take this maxim for an undoubted truth, That no young man can possibly improve in any company, for which he has not respect enough to be under some degree of reftraint.

I dare not trust to Meyssonier's report of his Rhenish, his Burgundy not having answered either his account or my expectations. I doubt, as a winemerchant, he is the persidus caupe, whatever he may be as a banker. I shall therefore venture upon none of his wine; but delay making my provision of Old-Hock, till I go abroad myself next spring; as I told you in the utmost secrecy, in my last, that I intend to do; and then probably I may taste some that I like, and go upon sure ground. There is commonly very good, both at Aix-la-Chapelle and Liege; where I formerly got some excellent, which I carried with me to Spa, where I drank no other wine.

As my letters to you frequently miscarry, I will repeat

peat in this, that part of my last, which related to your future motions. Whenever you shall be tired of Berlin, go to Dresden; where Sir Charles Williams will be, who will receive you with open arms. He dined with me to-day; and sets out for Dresden in about fix weeks. He spoke of you with great kindness and impatience to see you again. He will trust and employ you in bufiness (and he is now in the whole secret of importance) till we fix our place to meet in; which probably will be Spa. Whereever you are, inform yourfelf minutely of, and attend particularly to the affairs of France; they grow ferious, and in my opinion will grow more and more fo every day. The King is despised, and I do not wonder at it; but he has brought it about, to be hated at the same time, which seldom happens to the same man. His ministers are known to be as disunited as incapable: he hesitates between the Church and the Parliaments, like the Ass in the fable, that starved between two hampers of hay; too much in love with his mistress to part with her, and too much afraid for his foul, to enjoy her; jealous of the Parliaments, who would support his authority; and a devoted bigot to the Church, that would destroy it. The people are poor, consequently discontented : those who have religion, are divided in their notions of it; which is faying, that they hate one another. The Clergy never do forgive; much less will they forgive the Parliament: the Parliament never will forgive them. The army must without doubt take, in their own minds at least, different parts in all these disputes, which upon occasion would break out. Armies, though thou pow it to they the mor kan in I ters Spre fy n pre me gla and ref the oth no the fee pr lo re w yo ag

21

CI

to

red Vil-

ms.

den

eat

will

in ace

ere-end

rifo

onted

me as

the

ved ith

for its,

bi-

-09

ho

gy

the

m. wn

es,

es,

gh

though always the supporters and tools of absolute power for the time being, are always the destroyers of it too; by frequently changing the hands in which they think proper to lodge it. This was the case of the Prætorian bands, who deposed and murdered the monsters they had raised to oppress mankind. The Janissaries in Turkey, and the regiments of guards in Russia, do the same now. The French nation reafons freely, which they never did before, upon matters of religion and government, and begin to be spregiudicati; the officers do so too; in short, all the fymptoms, which I have ever met with in history, previous to great changes and revolutions in Government, now exist, and daily increase in France. I am glad of it; the rest of Europe will be the quieter, and have time to recover. England, I am fure, wants rest; for it wants men and money: the Republic of the United Provinces wants both, still more: the other Powers cannot well dance, when neither France, nor the maritime Powers, can, as they used to do, pay the piper. The first squabble in Europe, that I forefee, will be about the Crown of Poland, should the present King die; and therefore I wish his Majesty a long life and a merry Christmas. So much for foreign politics: but, à propos of them, pray take care, while you are in those parts of Germany, to inform yourself correctly of all the details, discussions, and agreements, which the several wars, confications, bans, and treaties, occasioned between the Bavarian and Palatine Electorates: they are interesting and curious.

I shall not, upon the occasion of the approaching new year, repeat to you the wishes which I continue to form for you; you know them all already; and you know that it is absolutely in your own power to satisfy most of them. Among many other wishes, this is my most earnest one, That you would open the new year with a most solemn and devout sacrifice to the Graces; who never reject those that supplicate them with servour: without them, let me tell you, that your friend Dame Fortune will stand you in little stead: may they all be your friends!

40 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Adieu.

LETTER CCCV.

London, January the 15th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have this moment received your letter of the 26th past, from Munich. Since you are got so well out of the distress and dangers of your journey from Manheim, I am glad that you were in them, Condisce i diletti Memoria di pene, Ne sa che sia bene Chi mal non soffri.

They were but little samples of the much greater distress and dangers which you must expect to meet with in your great, and, I hope, long journey through life. In some parts of it, slowers are scattered with profusion, the road is smooth, and the prospect pleafant; but in others (and I fear the greater number) the road is rugged, beset with thorns and briars, and but eith

1 tha ed bit my yo ye Be

l a fti th th

ar at ev

you

E

2

cut

cut by torrents. Gather the flowers in your way; but at the same time guard against the briars that are either mixed with them, or that most certainly succeed them.

you

fa-

this tne

e to ate

ou.

in eu.

th ell

m et

h

h

.

d

I thank you for your wild boar, who, now he is dead, I affure him fe laiffera bien manger malgre qu'il en ait; though I am not fure that I should have had that personal valour which so successfully distinguished you in fingle combat with him, which made him bite the dust like Homer's heroes, and, to conclude my period sublimely, put him into that pickle, from which I propose eating him. At the same time that I applaud your valour, I must do justice to your modefty; which candidly admits, that you were not over-matched, and that your adversary was of about your own age and fize. A Marcassin, being under a year old, would have been below your indignation. Bête de compagnie, being under two years old, was ftill in my opinion below your glory; but I guess that your enemy was un Ragot, that is, from two to three years old; an age and fize which, between man and boar, answer pretty well to yours.

If accidents of bad roads or waters do not detain you at Munich, I do not fancy that pleasures will; and I rather believe you will seek for, and find them at the Carnival at Berlin; in which supposition, I eventually direct this letter to your banker there. While you are at Berlin (I earnestly recommend it to you again and again) pray care to see, hear, know, and mind, every thing there. The ablest Prince in Europe, is surely an object that deserves attention; and the least thing that he does, like the smallest sketches of the greatest painters, has its value, and a confiderable one too.

(ketches

LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Read with care the Code Frederick, and inform yourfelf of the good effects of it, in those parts of his dominions where it has taken place, and where it has banished the former chicanes, quirks, and quibbles of the old law. Do not think any detail too minute, or trifling, for your inquiry and observation. I wish that you could find one hour's leifure every day, to read some good Italian author, and to cobverse in that language with our worthy friend Signor Angelo Cori: it would both refresh and improve your Italian, which, of the many languages you know, I take to be that in which you are the least perfect; but of which too, you already know enough to make yourself master of, with very little trouble, whenever you please.

Live, dwell, and grow, at the feveral Courts there; use them so much to your face, that they may not look upon you as a stranger. Observe, and take their tone, even to their affectations and follies; for such there are, and perhaps should be, at all Courts. Stay, in all events, at Berlin, till I inform you of Sir Charles Williams's arrival at Dresden; where I suppose you would not care to be before him, and where you may go as foon after him as ever you please. Your time there will neither be unprofitably nor disagreeably spent; he will introduce you into all the best company, though he can introduce you to none so good as his own. He has of late applied himself very seriously to foreign affairs, especially those of Saxony and Poland; he knows them perfectly well, and will tell you what he knows. He always expresses,

fince T

expr

publ ftudi to, thof Effa by t He elog do; our forn are whi our fha! Bu you tha wh no > the COI mı do id m

> > ho

th

expresses, and I have good reason to believe very fincerely, great kindness and affection for you.

d a orm

s of

e it

iib-

too

on.

ery

ob-

nor

ove

you

eaft

ıgh

ole,

re ;

not eir

ach

rts.

of

ere

ind

Ou

bly

nto

ou

ied

lly

ct-

ays

es,

The works of the late Lord Bolingbroke are just published, and have plunged me into philosophical studies; which hitherto I have not been much used to, or delighted with; convinced of the futility of those researches: but I have read his Philosophical Essay upon the extent of human knowledge, which, by the way, makes two large quarto's and an half. He there shows very clearly, and with most splendid eloquence, what the human mind can, and cannot do; that our understandings are wifely calculated for our place in this planet, and for the link which we form in the universal chain of things; but that they are by no means capable of that degree of knowledge, which our curiofity makes us fearch after, and which our vanity makes us often believe we arrive at. I shall not recommend to you the reading of that work. But when you return hither, I shall recommend to your frequent and diligent perusal, all his tracts, that are relative to our history and constitution; upon which he throws lights, and scatters graces, which no other writer has ever done.

Reading, which was always a pleasure to me, in the time even of my greatest dissipation, is now become my only refuge; and, I fear, I indulge it too much, at the expence of my eyes. But what can I do? I must do something; I cannot bear absolute idleness: my ears grow every day more useless to me, my eyes consequently more necessary; I will not hoard them like a miser, but will rather risk the loss, than not enjoy the use of them.

Pray let me know all the particulars, not only of your your reception at Munich, but also at Berlin; at the latter, I believe, it will be a good one; for his Prussian Majesty knows, that I have long been an admirer and respecter of his great and various talents.

Adieu.

LETTER CCCVI.

London, February the 1st, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Received, yesterday, yours of the 12th from Mu-I nich; in consequence of which, I direct this to you there, though I directed my three last to Berlin, where I suppose you will find them at your arrival. Since you are not only domesticated, but niché at Munich, you are much in the right to stay there. It is not by feeing places, that one knows them, but by familiar and daily conversations with the people of fashion. I would not care to be in the place of that prodigy of beauty, whom you are to drive dans la course de Traineaux; and I am apt to think you are much more likely to break her bones, than she is, though ever fo cruel, to break your heart. Nay, I am not fure but that, according to all the rules of gallantry, you are obliged to overturn her on purpose: in the first place, for the chance of seeing her backfide; in the next, for the fake of the contrition and concern which it would give you an opportunity of showing: and lastly, upon account of all the gentillesses et epigrammes, which it would naturally suggest. Voiture has made several stanzas, upon an accident of that kind, which happened to a lady of his his a then of th conce affec vou Fair time of a beal ly b que pose for loft dov rou you find d'A Bou

On riot in the left Th

wil

the

cor

the ruf-

sirer

eu.

754.

Mu-

s to rlin.

ival.

é at

ere.

but

ople

e of dans

you

she

Vay,

pur-

her

tion

rtu-

all ally

an

y of

his

his acquaintance. There is a great deal of wit in them, rather too much; for, according to the tafte of those times, they are full of what the Italians call concetti fpiritofiffimi ; the Spaniards, agudeze ; and we, affectation and quaintness. I hope you have endeavoured to fuit your Traineau to the character of the Fair-one whom it is to contain. If she is of an irascible, impetuous disposition (as fine women can sometimes be) you will doubtless place her in the body of a lion, a tyger, a dragon, or some tremendous beaft of prey and fury; if she is a sublime and stately beauty, wnich I think more probable (for unquestionably she is bogh gebohrne) you will, I suppose, provide a magnificent swan or proud peacock for her reception; but if she is all tenderness and softness, you have, to be sure, taken care, amorous doves and wanton sparrows should seem to flutter round her. Proper mottos, I take it for granted, that you have eventually prepared; but if not, you may find a great many ready-made ones, in Les entretiens d'Ariste et d'Eugene, sur les devises, written by Pere Bouhours, and worth your reading at any time. I will not fay to you, upon this occasion, like the Father in Ovid.

Parce puer stimulis et fortius utere loris.

On the contrary, drive on briskly; it is not the chariot of the sun that you drive, but you carry the sun in your chariot; consequently, the faster it goes, the less it will be likely either to scorch or consume. This is Spanish enough, I am sure.

If this finds you still at Munich, pray make many compliments from me to Mr. Burrish, to whom I am very very much obliged for all his kindness to you: it is true, that while I had power, I endeavoured to serve him; but it is as true too, that I served many others more, who have neither returned nor remembered those services.

I have been very ill this last fortnight, of your old Carniolan complaint, the arthritis vaga; luckily, it did not fall upon my breast, but seized on my right arm; there it sixed its seat of empire; but, as in all tyrannical governments, the remotest parts selt their share of its severity. Last post I was not able to hold a pen long enough to write to you, and therefore desired Mr. Grevenkop to do it for me; but that letter was directed to Berlin. My pain is now much abated, though I have still some sine remains of it in my shoulder, where I fear it will teaze me a great while. I must be careful to take Horace's advice, and consider well Quid valeant humeri, quid ferre recusent.

Lady Chestersield bids me make you her compliments, and assure you, that the music will be much more welcome to her with you, than without you.

In some of my last letters, which were directed to, and will I suppose wait for you at Berlin, I complimented you, and with justice, upon your great improvement of late in the epistolary way, both with regard to the style and the turn of your letters; your sour or sive last to me have been very good ones, and one that you wrote to Mr. Harte, upon the New Year, was so pretty a one, and he was so much and so justly pleased with it, that he sent it me from Windsor, the instant he had read it. This talent (and a most necessary one it is in the course of life) is to b quir try, nigh ness you will veft Deli men addi civi with figu in t of tl rece goo

min

I beli

is a

thers ered r old ly, it right as in felt able and me ; in is e reteaze ace's quid

S it is ferve

nplinuch u. d to,

npliimwith your and New and from alent

fe) is

to

to be acquired by resolving, and taking pains to acquire it; and, indeed, so is every talent except poetry, which is undoubtedly a gift. Think therefore, night and day, of the turn, the purity, the correctness, the perspicuity, and the elegancy of whatever you speak or write: take my word for it your labour will not be in vain, but greatly rewarded by the harvest of praise and success which it will bring you. Delicacy of turn, and elegancy of flyle, are ornaments as necessary to common sense, as attentions, address, and fashionable manners, are to common civility; both may subsist without them, but then, without being of the least use to the owner. The figure of a man is exactly the fame, in dirty rags, or in the finest and best-chosen clothes; but in which of the two he is the most likely to please, and to be received in good company, I leave to you to deter-

Both my arm and my paper hint to me, to bid you good night.

LETTER CCCVII.

London, February the 12th, 1754. MY DEAR FRIEND,

Take my aim, and let off this letter at you, at Berlin; I should be forry it missed you, because I believe you will read it with as much pleasure as I write it. It is to inform you, that, after some difficulties and dangers, your feat in the new Parliament is at last absolutely secured, and that without opposition, or the least necessity of your personal trouble or appearance. This success, I must farther inform you, is in a great degree owing to Mr. Eliot's friendship to us both; for he brings you in with himself, at his surest borough. As it was impossible to act with more zeal and friendship, than Mr. Eliot has acted in this whole affair, I desire that you will, by the very next post, write him a letter of thanks; warm and young thanks, not old and cold ones. You may enclose it in yours to me, and I will send it to him, for he is now in Cornwall.

tion,

Thus, fure of being a Senator, I dare fay you do not propose to be one of the pedarii senatores, et pedibus ire in sententiam; for, as the House of Commons is the theatre where you must make your fortune and figure in the world, you must resolve to be an actor, and not a persona muta, which is just equivalent to a candle-snuffer upon other theatres. Whoever does not shine there is obscure, insignificant and contemptible; and you cannot conceive how easy it is. for a man of half your fense and knowledge, to shine there if he pleases. The receipt to make a speaker, and an applauded one too, is short and easy-Take of common fense quantum sufficit, add a little application to the rules and orders of the House, throw obvious thoughts in a new light, and make up the whole with a large quantity of purity, correctness and elegancy of style. - Take it for granted, that by far the greatest part of mankind do neither analyse nor search to the bottom; they are incapable of penetrating deeper than the furface. All have senses to be gratified, very few have reason to be applied to. Graceful utterance and action please their eyes,

ey

re

on pe

m

2 tra

of tra

w

th

ev

W

fo

la

ga

th

th

ev

gr

of

th

WI

th

Bo

da

by

to

to

ha

tic

n m

's

th

le

ot

11,

s ;

s.

ba

ot

ire

he

re

nd

a

n-

is,

to

: 2

nd

da

fe,

up

eft-

ed.

her

ble

ave

ap-

neir

/es,

eyes, elegant diction tickles their ears; but frong reason would be thrown away upon them. I am not only perfuaded by theory, but convinced by my experience, that (supposing a certain degree of common fense) what is called a good speaker, is as much a mechanic as a good shoemaker; and that the two trades are equally to be learned by the same degree of application. Therefore, for God's fake, let this trade be the principal object of your thoughts; never lese fight of it. Attend minutely to your style, whatever language you speak or write in; seek for the best words, and think of the best turns. Whenever you doubt of the propriety or elegancy of any word, fearch the dictionary or fome good author for it, or inquire of somebody, who is master of that language; and in a little time, propriety and elegancy of diction will become fo habitual to you, that they will cost you no more trouble. As I have laid this down to be mechanical, and attainable by whoever will take the necessary pains, there will be no great vanity in my faying, that I faw the importance of the object so early, and attended to it so young, that it would now cost me more trouble to speak or write ungrammatically, vulgarly, and inelegantly, than ever it did to avoid doing fo. The late Lord Bolingbroke, without the least trouble, talked all day long, full as elegantly as he wrote. Why? Not by a peculiar gift from heaven; but, as he has often tols me himself, by an early and constant attention to his style. The present Solicitor-general, Murray*, has less law than many lawyers, but has more practice than any; merely upon account of his eloquence, of which he has a never-failing flream. I remember, fo long ago as when I was at Cambridge, whenever I read pieces of eloquence (and indeed they were my chief study) whether ancient or modern, I used to write down the shining passages, and then translate them, as well and as elegantly as ever I could; if Latin or French, into English; if English, into This, which I practifed for some years, not only improved and formed my flyle, but imprinted in my mind and memory the best thoughts of the best authors. The trouble was little, but the advantage I have experienced was great. While you are abroad, you can neither have time nor opportunity to read pieces of English, or Parliamentary eloquence, as I hope you will carefully do when you return; but, in the mean time, whenever pieces of French eloquence come in your way, fuch as the speeches of persons received into the Academy, oraisons sunebres, representations of the several Parliaments to the king, &c. read them in that view, in that spirit; observe the harmony, the turn and elegancy of the style; examine in what you think it might have been better; and confider in what, had you written it yourfelf, you might have done worse. Compare the different manners of expressing the same thoughts, in different authors; and observe how differently the same things appear in different dresses. Vulgar, coarse, and ill-chosen words, will deform and degrade the best thoughts, as much as rags and dirt will the best figure. In short, you now know your object; pursue it steadily, and have no digresfions that are not relative to, and connected with the main action. Your success in Parliament will effectually a o you mir

· Created Lord Mansfield in the year 1756.

of whi wil

Bei Ad

are a N to dec in the Par diff

a bel ne

tar

tually remove all other objections; either a foreign or a domestic destination will no longer be refused you, if you make your way to it through West-minster.

I

y

0 te

if

to ot

d

e re ty

oou of

he y, irin

eit

ad

fe.

ne

if-

es.

m

nd

OW

ef-

he ec-

lly

I think I may now fay, that I am quite recovered of my late illness, strength and spirits excepted, which are not yet restored. Aix-la-Chapelle and Spa will, I believe, answer all my purposes.

I long to hear an account of your reception at Berlin, which I fancy will be a most gracious one. Adieu.

LETTER CCCVIII.

London, February the 15th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Can now with great truth apply your own motto to you, Nullum numen abest, si sit prudentia. You are fure of being, as early as your age will permit, a Member of that House; which is the only road to figure and fortune in this country. Those indeed who are bred up to, and distinguish themselves in particular professions, as the army, the navy, and the law, may by their own merit raise themselves to a certain degree; but you may observe too, that they never get to the top, without the affiftance of The means of Parliamentary talents and influence. distinguishing yourself in Parliament are, as I told you in my last, much more easily attained than I believe you imagine. Close attendance to the business of the House will soon give you the Parliamentary routine; and frict attention to your ftyle will

D 2

foon

foon make you, not only a speaker, but a good one. The vulgar look upon a man, who is reckoned a fine speaker, as a phænomenon, a supernatural being. and endowed with some peculiar gift of Heaven: they stare at him if he walks in the Park, and cry, that is be. You will, I am fure, view him in a juster light, and nulla formidine. You will consider him only as a man of good-sense, who adorns common thoughts with the graces of elocution, and the elegancy of flyle. The miracle will then cease; and you will be convinced, that with the same application, and attention to the same objects, you may most certainly equal, and perhaps furpass this prodigy. Sir W - Y -, with not a quarter of your parts, and not a thousandth part of your knowledge, has, by a glibness of tongue singly, raised himself succesfively to the best employments of the kingdom: he has been Lord of the Admiralty, Lord of the Treafury, Secretary at War, and is now Vice-Treasurer of Ireland; and all this, with a most sullied, not to fay blafted character. Represent the thing to yourfelf, as it really is, easily attainable, and you will find it fo. Have but ambition enough passionately to defire the object, and spirit enough to use the means, and I will be answerable for your success. When I was younger than you are, I resolved within myself that I would in all events be a speaker in Parliament, and a good one too, if I could. I consequently never lost fight of that object, and never neglected any of the means that I thought led to it. I succeeded to a certain degree; and, I assure you, with great eafe, and without superior talents.

Young

Yo

thi

the

be rea

do

ly

tha

COL

her

abl

the

the

Th

fen

cor

lyf

im

the

Ca

gre to no

bri

la l

I w

at 1

and

feer

con

All

N

e.

10

g,

1:

у,

er

m

on

end

a-oft

y.

ts,

as,

ef-

he ea-

rer

to ur-

vill

tely

the ess.

ved

ker

ever

to

Ture

nts.

ung

I

Young people are very apt to over-rate both men and things, from not being enough acquainted with them. In proportion as you come to know them better, you will value them less. You will find that reason, which always ought to direct mankind, seldom does: but that passions and weaknesses commonly usurp its feat, and rule in its stead. You will find, that the ablest have their weak sides too, and are only comparatively able, with regard to the fill weaker herd: having fewer weaknesses themselves, they are able to avail themselves of the innumerable ones of the generality of mankind; being more masters of themselves, they become more easily masters of others. They address themselves to their weaknesses, their senses, their passions; never to their reason; and consequently seldom fail of success. But then ana. lyfe those great, those governing, and, as the vulgar imagine, those perfect Characters; and you will find the great Brutus a thief in Macedonia, the great Cardinal de Richelieu a jealous poetaster, and the great Duke of Marlborough a mifer. Till you come to know mankind by your own experience, I know no thing, nor no man, that can in the mean time bring you so well acquainted with them as le Duc de la Rochefoucault: his little book of Maxims, which I would advise you to look into, for some moments at least, every day of your life, is, I fear, too like, and too exact a picture of human nature: I own, it feems to degrade it; but yet my experience does not convince me that it degrades it unjustly.

Now to bring all this home to my first point. All these considerations should not only invite you to attempt to make a figure in Parliament; but encourage you to hope that you shall succeed. To govern mankind, one must not over-rate them; and to please an audience, as a speaker, one must not over-value it. When I first came into the House of Commons, I respected that assembly as a venerable one; and felt a certain awe upon me: but, upon better acquaintance, that awe foon vanished; and I discovered, that, of the five hundred and fixty, not above thirty could understand reason, and that all the rest were peuple: that those thirty only required plain common sense, dressed up in good language; and that all the others only required flowing and harmonious periods, whether they conveyed any meaning or not; having ears to hear, but not fense enough These considerations made me speak with little concern the first time, with less the second, and with none at all the third. I gave myfelf no farther trouble about any thing, except my elocution, and my flyle; prefuming, without much vanity, that I had common sense sufficient not to talk nonsense. Fix these three truths strongly in your mind: First, That it is absolutely necessary for you to speak in Parliament; fecondly, That it only requires a little human attention, and no supernatural gifts; and, thirdly, That you have all the reason in the world to think that you shall speak well. When we meet, this shall be the principal subject of our conversations; and, if you will follow my advice, I will answer for your success.

Now from great things to little ones; the transition is to me easy, because nothing seems little to me, that can be of any use to you. I hope you take great care the was into ever flic was the my that desired has yo de it, K wi an fo fo

m

fu

de

en-

To

and not

e of

able pon

I be

not

t all

ired

ge;

nar-

an-

ugh

vith

and her

and at I

nfe.

irft,

ar-

ttle

nd,

d to ns;

hat reat them well every morning with a spunge and tepid water, with a sew drops of arquebusade water dropped into it; besides washing your mouth carefully after every meal. I do insist upon your never using those sticks, or any hard substance whatsoever, which always rub away the gums, and destroy the varnish of the teeth. I speak this from woeful experience; for my negligence of my teeth, when I was younger than you are, made them bad; and afterwards, my desire to have them look better, made me use sticks, irons, &c. which totally destroyed them; so that I have not now above six or seven left. I lost one this morning, which suggested this advice to you.

I have received the tremendous wild boar, which your still more tremendous arm slew in the immense desarts of the Palatinate; but have not yet tasted of it, as it is hitherto above my low regimen. The late King of Prussia, whenever he killed any number of wild boars, used to oblige the Jews to buy them, at an high price, though they could eat none of them; so they desayed the expence of his hunting. His son has juster rules of government, as the Code Frederique plainly shows.

I hope that, by this time, you are as well ancré at Berlin as you were at Munich; but if not, you are fure of being so at Dresden. Adieu.

LETTER CCCIX.

London, February 26th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Have received your letters of the 4th from Munich, and of the 11th from Ratilbon; but I have not received that of the 31st January, to which you refer in the former. It is to this negligence and uncertainty of the post, that you owe your accidents between Munich and Ratisbon; for, had you received my letters regularly, you would have received one from me, before you left Munich, in which I advised you to stay, since you were so well there. But at all events, you were in the wrong to fet out from Munich in such weather and such roads; since you could never imagine that I had fet my heart fo much upon your going to Berlin, as to venture your being buried in the snow for it. Upon the whole, confidering all, you are very well off. You do quite right, in my mind, to return to Munich, or at least to keep within the circle of Munich, Ratisbon, and Manheim, till the weather and the roads are good: stay at each or any of those places as long as ever you please; for I am extremely indifferent about your going to Berlin.

As to our meeting, I will tell you my plan, and you may form your own accordingly. I propose setting out from hence the last week in April, then drinking the Aix-la-Chapelle waters for a week, and from thence being at Spa about the 15th of May, where I shall stay two months at most, and then returning straight to England. As I both hope and believe lie rei til yo an yo th up m

Si

tin

fer lik at m

for

to

CO

fer El gi wh

III a fac

lei

or

in

lieve that there will be no mortal at Spa during my residence there, the fashionable season not beginning till the middle of July, I would by no means have you come there at first, to be locked up with me and some few Capucins, for two months, in that miferable hole; but I would advise you to stay where you like best, till about the first week in July, and then to come and pick me up at Spa, or meet me upon the road at Liege or Brussels. As for the intermediate time, should you be weary of Manheim and Munich, you may, if you please, go to Dresden to Sir Charles Williams, who will be there before that time; or you may come for a month or fix weeks to the Hague; or, in short, go or stay wherever you like best. So much for your motions.

As you have fent for all the letters directed to you at Berlin, you will receive from thence volumes of mine, among which you will eafily perceive that fome were calculated for a supposed perusal previous to your opening them. I will not repeat any thing con ained in them, excepting that I defire you will fend me a warm and cordial letter of thanks for Mr. Eliot; who has, in the most friendly manner imaginable, fixed you at his own borough of Liskeard, where you will be elected jointly with him, without the least opposition or difficulty. I will forward that letter to him into Cornwall, where he now is.

Now that you are to be foon a man of bufinefs, I heartily wish you would immediately begin to be a man of method; nothing contributing more to facilitate and dispatch business, than method and order. Have order and method in your accounts, in your reading, in the allotment of your time; in 54.

DS

lut I ich and

nts re-

ved h I

ere. out

nce t fo

our ole.

uite east and

od: ever

out and pose then and

Aay, re-

believe

short, in every thing. You cannot conceive how much time you will fave by it, nor how much better every thing you do will be done. The Duke of Marlborough did by no means spend, but he slatterned himself into that immense debt, which is not yet near paid off. The hurry and confusion of the Duke of Newcastle do not proceed from his business, but from his want of method in it. Sir Robert Walpole, who had ten times the business to do, was never feen in a hurry, because he always did it with method. The head of a man who has bufiness, and no method nor order, is properly that rudis indigestaque moles quam dixere chaos. As you must be conscious that you are extremely negligent and flatternly, I hope you will refolve not to be fo for the future. Prevail with yourfelf, only to observe good method and order for one fortnight; and I will venture to affure you, that you will never neglect them afterwards, you will find fuch conveniency and tadvantage arising from them. Method is the great advantage that lawyers have over other people, in speaking in Parliament; for, as they must necessarily observe it in their pleadings in the Courts of Justice, it becomes habitual to them every where else. Without making you a compliment, I can tell you with pleasure, that order, method, and more activity of mind, are all that you want, to make, some day or other, a considerable figure in business. You have more useful knowledge, more discernment of characters, and much more discretion, than is common at your age; much more, I am fure, than I had at that age. Experience you cannot yet have, and therefore trust in the mean time to mine. I am an old old 35 fro fro

nit Re ago enc hea the kne

the mu Sti nef fere

me

cor ing and (if in pri

ren

Do it fuf my

qui Lic

tre

W

er

of

It-

30

he

fi-ert

lo,

it

fs,

in-

be at-

the

bod

en-

em

ad-

reat

in rily

ice,

ith-

vith

y of

y or

ave cha-

mon

d at

and n an old

old traveller; am well acquainted with all the bye as well as the great roads; I cannot misguide you from ignorance, and you are very sure I shall not from design.

I can affure you, that you will have no opportunity of subscribing yourself, my Excellency's, &c. Retirement and quiet were my choice some years ago, while I had all my fenses, and health and spirits enough to carry on business; but now I have lost my hearing, and find my conflictution declining daily, they are become my necessary and only refuge. know myfelf, (no common piece of knowledge, let me tell you) I know what I can, what I cannot, and consequently what I ought to do. I ought not, and therefore will not, return to business, when I am much less fit for it than I was when I quitted it. Still less will I go to Ireland, where, from my deafness and infirmities, I must necessarily make a different figure from that which I once made there. My pride would be too much mortified by that difference. The two important senses of seeing and hearing should not only be good, but quick in business; and the business of a Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (if he will do it himself) requires both those fenses in the highest perfection. It was the Duke of Dorfet's not doing the bufiness himself, but giving it up to favourites, that has occasioned all this confusion in Ireland; and it was my doing the whole myself, without either Favourite, Minister, or Mistress, that made my administration so smooth and quiet. I remember, when I named the late Mr. Liddel for my Secretary, every body was much fur-D 6 prifed

ſ

0

f

P

d

0 n

to

y

tl

V

9 li

it

h

te

it

d

prised at it; and some of my friends represented to me, that he was no man of business, but only a very genteel, pretty young fellow; I affured them, and with truth, that that was the very reason why I chose him: for that I was resolved to do all the business myself, and without even the suspicion of having a Minister; which the Lord Lieutenant's Secretary, if he is a man of business, is always supposed, and commonly with reason, to be. Moreover, I look upon myself now to be emeritus in business, in which I have been near forty years together; I give it up to you: apply yourfelf to it, as I have done, for forty years, and then I consent to your leaving it for a philosophical retirement, among your friends and your books. Statesmen and beauties are very rarely senfible of the gradations of their decay; and, too fanguinely hoping to shine on in their meridian, often fet with contempt and ridicule. I retired in time, uti conviva fatur; or, as Pope fays, still better, Ere tittering youth shall showe you from the stage. My only remaining ambition is to be the Counsellor and Minister of your rising ambition. Let me see my own youth revived in you; let me be your Mentor, and, with your parts and knowledge, I promise you, you shall go far. You must bring, on your part, activity and attention, and I will point out to you the proper objects for them. I own, I fear but one thing for you, and that is what one has generally the least reason to fear from one of your age; I mean your laziness; which, if you indulge, will make you stagnate in a contemptible obscurity all your life. It will hinder you from doing any thing that will deferve to be written, or from writing any thing that may deferve to

ry

nd

I

fi-

ng

nd

ok

ich

to rty hi-

our

enien

ne,

Ere

My

and wn nd,

you

vity

per

for reaazinate will e to de-erve

ferve to be read; and yet one or other of thefe two objects should be at least aimed at by every rational being. I look upon indolence as a fort of fuicide; for the Man is effectually destroyed, though the appetites of the Brute may furvive. Bufiness by no means forbids pleasures; on the contrary, they reciprocally feafon each other; and I will venture to affirm, that no man enjoys either in perfection, that does not join both. They whet the defire for each Use yourself therefore, in time, to be alert and diligent in your little concerns: never procraftinate, never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day; and never do two things at a time: pursue your object, be it what it will, steadily and indefatigably; and let any difficulties (if furmountable) rather animate than flacken your endeavours. Perfeverance has surprising effects.

I wish you would use yourself to translate, every day, only three or sour lines, from any book, in any language, into the correctest and most elegant English that you can think of; you cannot imagine how it will insensibly form your style, and give you an habitual elegancy: it would not take you up a quarter of an hour in a day. This letter is so long, that it will hardly leave you that quarter of an hour, the day you receive it.

LETTER CCCX.

London, March the 8th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Great and unexpected event has lately happen-A ed in our ministerial world - Mr. Pelham died last Monday, of a fever and mortification; occasioned by a general corruption of his whole mass of blood, which had broke out into fores in his back. I regret him as an old acquaintance, a pretty near relation, and a private man, with whom I have lived many years in a focial and friendly way. He meaned well to the public; and was incorrupt in a post where corruption is commonly contagious. If he was no shining, enterprizing Minister, he was a safe one, which I like better. Very thining Ministers, like the Sun, are apt to fcorch when they shine the brightest; in our constitution, I prefer the milder light of a less glaring Minister. His successor is not yet, at least publicly, defignatus. You will eafily suppose that many are very willing, and very few able to fill that post. Various persons are talked of, by different people, for it, according as their interest prompts them to wish, or their ignorance to conjecture. Mr. Fox is the most talked of; he is strongly supported by the Duke of Cumberland. Mr. Legge, the Solicitor General, and Dr. Lee, are likewise all spoken of, upon the foot of the Duke of Newcastle's, and the Chancellor's interest. Should it be any one of the three last, I think no great alterations will ensue; but should Mr. Fox prevail, it would, in my opinion, foon lou hea

Du con

loo

I n

upo lon

> In an

ric the

> ch th fo

fre

in fe

he go

th

(

(

1-

d

d

d, et

n,

rs

to

r-

n-

h

n,

in ·fs aft

at

at nt

ts

r.

ed

li-

en

nd

of

e;

n,

on

foon produce changes, by no means favourable to the Duke of Newcastle. In the mean time, the wild conjectures of volunteer politicians, and the ridiculous importance which, upon these occasions, blockheads always endeavour to give themselves, by grave looks, fignificant shrugs, and infignificant whispers, are very entertaining to a by-stander, as, thank God, One knows something, but is not yet at liberty to tell it; another has heard fomething from a very good hand; a third congratulates himself upon a certain degree of intimacy, which he has long had with every one of the candidates, though perhaps he has never spoken twice to any one of them. In short, in these fort of intervals, vanity, interest, and absurdity, always display themselves in the most ridiculous light. One who has been so long behind the scenes as I have, is much more diverted with the entertainment, than those can be who only see it from the pit and boxes. I know the whole machinery of the interior, and can laugh the better at the filly wonder and wild conjectures of the uninformed spectators. This accident, I think, cannot in the least affect your election, which is finally fettled with your friend Mr. Eliot. For, let who will prevail, I presume, he will consider me enough, not to overturn an arrangement of that fort, in which he cannot possibly be personally interested. So pray go on with your parliamentary preparations. Have that object always in your view, and pursue it with attention.

I take it for granted that your late residence in Germany has made you as perfect and correct in German, as you were before in French, at least it is worth worth your while to be so; because it is worth every man's while to be perfectly master of whatever language he may ever have occasion to speak. A man is not himself, in a language which he does not thoroughly possess; his thoughts are degraded, when inelegantly or imperfectly expressed: he is cramped and confined, and consequently can never appear to advantage. Examine and analyse those thoughts that firike you the most, either in conversation or in books; and you will find, that they owe at least half their merit to the turn and expression of them. There is nothing truer than that old faying, Nibil dictum quod non prius didum. It is only the manner of faying or writing it, that makes it appear new. Convince yourfelf, that Manner is almost every thing, in every thing, and study it accordingly.

I am this moment informed, and I believe truly, that Mr. Fox * is to succeed Mr. Pelham, as first Commissioner of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer; and your friend Mr. Yorke of the Hague, to succeed Mr. Fox, as Secretary at war. I am not forry for this promotion of Mr. Fox, as I have always been upon civil terms with him, and found him ready to do me any little services. He is frank and gentleman-like in his manner; and, to a certain degree, I really believe will be your friend upon my account; if you can afterwards make him yours, upon your own, tant mieux. I have nothing more to say now, but Adieu.

* Henry Fox, created Lord Holland, Baron of Foxley, in the year 1763.

LETTER

M

than

in G

I ho

2000

Inov

You

thei

fron

Rat

ign

fom

whi

dra

fce

the

mi

in

Ex

N

by

be pe

W

ery

not

en

to

hat

ks:

eir

is bou

or

ar-

ry

ly,

m-

X-

le,

ot

ys

and

e-

ny

rs,

to

he

R

LETTER CCCXI.

London, March the 15th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

W E are here in the midst of a second winter; the cold is more severe, and the snow deeper, than they were in the first. I presume your weather in Germany is not much more gentle; and therefore, I hope that you are quietly and warmly fixed at some good town; and will not risk a second burial in the snow, after your late fortunate resurrection out of it. Your letters, I suppose, have not been able to make their way through the ice; for I have received none from you since that of the 12th of February, from Ratisbon. I am the more uneasy at this state of ignorance, because I fear that you may have sound some subsequent inconveniencies from your overturn, which you might not be aware of at first.

The curtain of the political theatre was partly drawn up the day before yesterday, and exhibited a scene which the public in general did not expect: the Duke of Newcastle was declared first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, Mr. Fox Secretary of State in his room, and Mr. Henry Legge Chancellor of the Exchequer, The employments of Treasurer of the Navy, and Secretary at War, supposed to be vacant by the promotion of Mr. Fox and Mr. Legge, were to be kept in petto till the dissolution of this Parliament, which will probably be next week, to avoid the expence and trouble of unnecessary re-elections; but it was generally supposed that Colonel Yorke, of the Hague, was to succeed Mr. Fox, and George Grenville.

all

mo

no

yo

yo

COI

lea

fec

wh

no

in fel

es

he

th

all

fre

el

fo

ha

m

fe

fe

m

01

1

d

P

W

n

ville, Mr. Legge. This scheme, had it taken place, you are, I believe, aware, was more a temporary expedient, for fecuring the elections of the new Parlia. ment, and forming it, at its first meeting, to the interests and the inclinations of the Duke of Newcastle and the Chancellor, than a plan of Administration either intended or wished to be permanent. scheme was disturbed yesterday: Mr. Fox, who had fullenly accepted the feals the day before, more fullenly refused them yesterday. His object was to be first Commissioner of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, and consequently to have a share in the election of the new Parliament, and a much greater in the management of it when chosen. This necessary consequence of his view defeated it; and the Duke of Newcastle and the Chancellor chose to kick him up-stairs into the Secretaryship of State, rather than trust him with either the election or the management of the new Parliament. In this, confidering their respective situations, they certainly acted wisely; but whether Mr. Fox has done so, or not, in refusing the seals, is a point which I cannot determine. If he is, as I prefume he is, animated with revenge, and I believe would not be over scrupulous in the means of gratifying it, I should have thought he could have done it better, as a Secretary of State, with constant admission into the closet, than as a private man at the head of an opposition. But I see all these things at too great a distance to be able to judge foundly of them. The true fprings and motives of political measures are confined within a very narrow circle, and known to very few; the good reasons alledged ace,

ex-

rlia-

inaftle

This.

had ful-

o be e in uch

This

and

e to

ate,

the

cted

not,

ter-

with lous

ight

ate,

pri-

e all

idge

s of

row

fons

lged

alledged are feldom the true ones. The Public commonly judges, or rather gueffes, wrong, and I am now one of that Public. I therefore recommend to you a prudent Pyrrhonism in all matters of state, until you become one of the wheels of them yourfelf, and consequently acquainted with the general motion, at least, of the others; for as to all the minute and fecret springs, that contribute more or less to the whole machine, no man living ever knows them all, not even he who has the principal direction of it. As in the human body, there are innumerable little veffels and glands, that have a good deal to do, and yet escape the knowledge of the most skilful anatomist; he will know more indeed, than those who only see the exterior of our bodies; but he will never know This buille, and these changes at Court, far from having disturbed the quiet and security of your election, have, if possible, rather confirmed them; for the Duke of Newcastle (I must do him justice) has, in the kindest manner imaginable to you, wrote a letter to Mr. Eliot, to recommend to him the utmost care of your election.

Though the plan of administration is thus unfettled, mine, for my travels this summer, is finally settled; and I now communicate it to you, that you may form your own upon it. I propose being at Spa on the 10th or 12th of May, and staying there till the 10th of July. As there will be no mortal there during my stay, it will be both unpleasant and unprofitable to you to be shut up tête à-tête with me the whole time; I should therefore think it best for you not to come to me there till the last week in June.

In the mean time, I suppose that by the middle of April you will think you have had enough of Man. heim, Munich, or Ratisbon, and that district. Where would you chuse to go then? for I leave you absolutely your choice. Would you go to Dresden for a month or fix weeks? That is a good deal out of your way; and I am not fure that Sir Charles will be there by that time. Or would you rather take Bonn in your way, and pass the time till we meet at the Hague? From Manheim you may have a great many good letters of recommendation to the Court of Bonn; which Court, and its Elector, in one light or another, are worth your feeing. From thence your journey to the Hague, will be but a short one; and you would arrive there at that feason of the year when the Hague is, in my mind, the most agreeable, smiling scene in Europe; and from the Hague you would have but three very easy days journies to me at Spa. Do as you like; for, as I told you before, Ella è affolutamente padrone. But lest you should answer, that you desire to be determined by me, I will eventually tell you my opinion. I am rather inclined to the latter plan; I mean, that of your coming to Bonn, staying there according as you like it, and then passing the remainder of your time, that is May and June, at the Hague. Our connection and transactions with the Republic of the United Provinces are such, that you cannot be too well acquainted with that conflitution, and with those people. You have established good acquaintances there, and you have been fêtoie round by the foreign Ministers: so that you will be there en pais connu. Moreover,

More Gow show in more How bette to do and out mea have you fpol a m was nex

la c coul

hop

I the The fere favo

wor till be o

they they for of

n-

ere

fo-

ra

of ill

ke

at

eat

urt

ght

our

ind

ear ee-

que

s to beuld

e, I

her

our ike

hat

ion

ited

ac-

eo-

ere,

Mi-

inu.

ver,

Moreover, you have not feen the Stadthouder, the Gouvernante, nor the Court there, which à bon compte should be seen. Upon the whole then, you cannot, in my opinion, pass the months of May and June more agreeably, or more usefully, than at the Hague. However, if you have any other plan, that you like better, pursue it: only let me know what you intend to do, and I shall most chearfully agree to it.

The Parliament will be dissolved in about ten days, and the writs for the election of the new one issued out immediately afterwards; fo that, by the end of next month, you may depend upon being Membre de la chambre baffe; a title that founds high in foreign countries, and perhaps higher than it deserves. I hope you will add a better title to it in your own, I mean that of a good speaker in Parliament: you have, I am fure, all the materials necessary for it, if you will but put them together and adorn them. spoke in Parliament the first month I was in it, and a month before I was of age; and from the day I was elected, till the day that I spoke, I am sure I thought nor dreamed of nothing but speaking. The first time, to fay the truth, I spoke very indifferently as to the matter; but it passed tolerably, in favour of the spirit with which I uttered it, and the words in which I dreffed it. I improved by degrees, till at last it did tolerably well. The House, it must be owned, is always extremely indulgent to the two or three first attempts of a young speaker; and if they find any degree of common sense in what he says, they make great allowances for his inexperience, and for the concern which they suppose him to be under.

70 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

I experienced that indulgence; for had I not been a young Member, I should certainly have been, as I own I deserved, reprimanded by the House for some strong and indiscreet things that I said. Adieu! it is indeed high time.

LETTER CCCXII.

London, March the 26th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

7 ESTERDAY I received your letter of the 15th from Manheim, where I find you have been received in the usual gracious manner; which I hope you return in a graceful one. As this is a feason of great devotion and solemnity in all Catholic countries, pray inform yourfelf of, and constantly attend to all their filly and pompous Church ceremonies; one ought to know them. I am very glad that you wrote the letter to Lord _____, which, in every different case that can possibly be supposed, was, I am sure, both a decent and a prudent step. You will find it very difficult, whenever we meet, to convince me that you could have any good reasons for not doing it; for I will, for argument's fake, suppose, what I cannot in reality believe, that he has both faid and done the worst he could, of and by you; what then? How will you help yourself? Are you in a fituation to hurt him? Certainly not; but he certainly is in a fituation to hurt you. Would you show a fullen, pouting, impotent refentment? I hope not: leave that filly, unavailing fort of refentment to women, and men like them, who are always guided by humour, never by reason and prudence.

denc deal the vou cond men tify; The the v femb with cann mine to fo fhow auth and very breal trary of d their pout Un b have rival me. as ar I thi I lon

de l'

s I

me

it

54.

the

ave nich

is a tho-

ntly

mo-

that very

is. I

You

cons for fup-

has

l by

elf?

not; ould

ent? re-

are

prunce. dence. That pettish, pouting conduct is a great deal too young, and implies too little knowledge of the world, for one who has feen fo much of it as you have. Let this be one invariable rule of your conduct-Never to show the least symptom of refentment, which you cannot, to a certain degree, gratify; but always to smile where you cannot strike. There would be no living in Courts, nor indeed in the world, if one could not conceal, and even diffemble the just causes of resentment, which one meets with every day in active and busy life. cannot master his humour enough, pour faire bonne mine à mauvais jeu, should leave the world, and retire to some hermitage, in an unfrequented desart. showing an unavailing and fullen refentment, you authorize the refentment of those who can hurt you. and whom you cannot hurt; and give them that very pretence, which perhaps they wished for, of breaking with, and injuring you; whereas the contrary behaviour would lay them under the restraints of decency at least; and either shackle or expose their malice. Besides, captiousness, sullenness, and pouting, are most exceedingly illiberal and vulgar. Un honnête homme ne les connoit point.

I am extremely glad to hear that you are foon to have Voltaire at Manheim: immediately upon his arrival, pray make him a thousand compliments from me. I admire him most exceedingly; and whether as an Epic, Dramatic, or Lyric Poet, or Profe-writer. I think I justly apply to him the Nil molitur inepte. I long to read his own correct edition of Les Annales de l'Empire, of which the Abregé Chronologique de l'Histoire Universelle, which I have read, is, I suppose, a stolen a stolen and imperfect part; however, imperfect as it is. it has explained to me that chaos of history of feven hundred years, more clearly, than any other book had done before. You judge very rightly, that I love le style leger et seuri. I do, and so does every body who has any parts and tafte. It should, I confels, be more or less fleuri, according to the subject; but at the same time I affert, that there is no subject that may not properly, and which ought not to be adorned, by a certain elegancy and beauty of style. What can be more adorned than Cicero's Philosophical Works? What more than Plato's? It is their eloquence only, that has preferved and transmitted them down to us, through fo many centuries; for the philosophy of them is wretched, and the reafoning part miserable. But eloquence will always please, and has always pleased. Study it therefore; make it the object of your thoughts and attention. Use yourself to relate elegantly; that is a good step towards speaking well in Parliament. Take some political subject, turn it in your thoughts, consider what may be faid, both for and against it, then put those arguments into writing, in the most correct and elegant English you can. For instance, a standing army, a place bill, &c.; as to the former, confider, on one fide, the dangers arising to a free country from a great standing military force; on the other fide, confider the necessity of a force to repel force with. Examine whether a standing army, though in itself an evil, may not, from circumstances, become a necessary evil, and preventive of greater dangers. As to the latter, consider how far places may bias and warp the conduct of fmen, rom the service of their

th to will up

an be 20 an di tio

> to to wh

> elo

yo wi

ac

me fiv

ho

poi I i

you

is,

en

ok

t I

ery

on-

a:

iect

be yle.

ofo-

heir

for reavays

ore;

ion.

ftep

ome

Gder

put

and ding

ider,

ntry

other force

gh in come

gers.

biass

ce of their

their country, into an unwarrantable complaisance to the court; and, on the other hand, confider whether they can be supposed to have that effect upon the conduct of people of probity and property, who are more folidly interested in the permanent good of their country, than they can be in an uncertain and precarious employment. Seek for, and answer in your own mind, all the arguments that can be urged on either fide, and write them down in an elegant flyle. This will prepare you for debating, and give you an habitual eloquence; for I would not give a farthing for a mere holyday eloquence. displayed once or twice in a session, in a set declamation; but I want an every day, ready, and habitual eloquence, to adorn extempore, and debating speeches; to make bufiness not only clear but agreeable, and to please even those whom you cannot inform, and who do not defire to be informed. All this you may acquire, and make habitual to you, with as little trouble as it cost you to dance a minuet as well as you do. You now dance it mechanically, and well, without thinking of it.

I am surprised that you found but one letter from me at Manheim, for you ought to have found four or five; there are as many lying for you, at your banker's at Berlin, which I wish you had, because I always endeavoured to put something into them, which, I hope, may be of use to you.

When we meet at Spa, next July, we must have a great many serious conversations; in which I will pour out all my experience of the world, and which, I hope, you will trust to, more than to your own young notions of men and things. You will, in time, discover most of them to have been erroneous; and, if you follow them long, you will perceive your error too late; but, if you will be led by a guide, who, you are sure, does not mean to mislead you, you will unite two things, seldom united in the same person; the vivacity and spirit of youth, with the caution and experience of age.

Vol. IV. E time,

74 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

I aft Saturday, Sir Thomas Robinson *, who had been the King's Minister at Vienna, was declared Secretary of State for the southern department, Lord Holdernesse having taken the northern. Sir Thomas accepted it unwillingly, and, as I hear, with a promise that he shall not keep it long. Both his health and spirits are bad, two very disqualifying circumstances for that employment; yours, I hope, will enable you, some time or other, to go through with it. In all events, aim at it, and if you fail or fall, let it at least be said of you, Magnis tamen excidit auss. Adieu!

LETTER CCCXIII.

London, April the 5th, 1774.

My DEAR FRIEND,

Received, yesterday, your letter of the 20th March, from Manheim, with the enclosed for Mr. Eliot; it was a very proper one, and I have forwarded it to him by Mr. Harte, who sets out for Cornwall to-morrow morning.

* Created Lord Grantham in the Year 1761, and fince Embaffador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Court of Spain.

I am

ti

ft

T

in

th

W

fo

to yo

wl

EV

no

tur

tro

of i

of a inci feq too

flan

lang

by

be d furd

by t mitt

in the

but.

ierm

I am very glad that you use yourself to translations; and I do not care of what, provided you fludy the correctness and elegancy of your style. The Life of Sextus Quintus is the best book, of the innumerable books written by Gregorio Leti, whom the Italians, very juftly, call Leti caca libri. But I would rather that you chose some pieces of oratory for your translations, whether ancient or modern, Latin or French; which would give you a more oratorial train of thoughts, and turn of expression. your letter to me, you make use of two words, which, though true and correct English, are, however, from long disuse, become inelegant, and seem now to be stiff, formal, and in some degree scriptural: the first is the word namely, which you introduce thus, You inform me of a very agreeable piece of news, namely, that my election is secured. Instead of namely, I would always use, which is, or that is, that my election is fecured. The other word is, Mine orwn inclinations: this is certainly correct, before a fubfequent word that begins with a vowel; but it is too correct, and is now disused as too formal, notwithflanding the biatus occasioned by my own. Every language has its peculiarities; they are established by usage, and, whether right or wrong, they must be complied with. I could instance many very abfurd ones in different languages; but so authorised by the jus et norma loquendi, that they must be fubmitted to. Namely, and to wit, are very good words in themselves, and contribute to clearness, more than the relatives which we now substitute in their room; but, however, they cannot be used, except in a fermon, or some very grave and formal composi-E 2 tions.

mvill ith

idit

e, u, ne

ad

ed

rd

123

-01

lth

74.

rch, iot; it to l to-

Em-

I am

tions. It is with language as with manners; they are both established by the usage of people of fashion; it must be imitated, it must be complied with. Singularity is only pardonable in old age and retirement; I may now be as singular as I please, but you may not. We will, when we meet, discuss these and many other points, provided you will give me attention and credit; without both which it is to no purpose to advise either you or any body else.

th

g

re

ti

0

th

li

N

Jç

b

di

m

91

W

m

m fr

W

fu

I want to know your determination, where you intend to (if I may use that expression) while away your time, till the last week in June, when we are to meet at Spa; I continue rather in the opinion which I mentioned to you formerly, in favour of the Hague; but however I have not the least objection to Dresden, or to any other place that you may like better. If you prefer the Dutch scheme, you take Treves and Coblentz in your way, as also Dusseldorp: all which places I think you have not yet seen. At Manheim you may certainly get good letters of recommendation to the Courts of the two Electors of Treves and Cologne, whom you are yet unacquainted with; and I should wish you to know For, as I have often told you, olim bet meminisse juvabit. There is an utility in having feen what other people have feen, and there is a justifiable pride in having feen what others have not feen. In the former case, you are equal to others; in the latter, Superior. As your stay abroad will not now be very long, pray, while it lasts, see every thing, and every body you can; and fee them well, with care and attention. It is not to be conceived of what what advantage it is to any body to have feen more things, people, and countries, than other people in general have : it gives them a credit, makes them referred to, and they become the objects of the attention of the company. They are not out in any part of polite conversation; they are acquainted with all the places, customs, courts, and families, that are likely to be mentioned; they are, as Monsieur de Maupertuis justly observes, de tous les pais, comme les scavans sont de tous les tems. You have, fortunately, both those advantages; the only remaining point is de scavoir les faire valoir; for without that, one may as well not have them. Remember that very true maxim of La Bruyere's, Qu'on ne vaut dans ce monde que ce qu'on veut valoir. The knowledge of the world will teach you to what degree you ought to show ce que vous valez. One must by no means, on one hand, be indifferent about it; as, on the other, one must not display it with affectation, and in an overbearing manner: but, of the two, it is better to show too much than too little. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXIV.

Bath, November the 27th, 1754.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Heartily congratulate you upon the loss of your political maidenhead, of which I have received from others a very good account. I hear that you were stopped for some time in your career; but recovered breath, and finished it very well. I am not surprised, nor indeed concerned, at your accident;

E 3

for noting, with vhat

hey

of ied

age

s I

you

oth

Or

you

vay

are

ion

the

ion

nay

YOU

also

not ood

yet

bæc

15 2

not

for I remember the dreadful feeling of that fituation in myself; and as it must require a most uncommon share of impudence to be unconcerned upon such an occasion, I am not fure that I am not rather glad you stopped. You must therefore now think of hardening yourfelf by degrees, by using yourfelf infenfibly to the found of your own voice, and to the act (trifling as it feems) of rifing up and fitting down again. Nothing will contribute fo much to this as committee work of elections at night, and of private bills in the morning. There, asking short questions, moving for witnesses to be called in, and all that kind of small ware, will soon fit you to fet up for yourfelf. I am told that you are much mortified at your accident; but without reason ; pray, let it rather be a spur than a curb to you. Perfevere, and depend upon it, it will do well at laft. When I fay persevere, I do not mean that you should speak every day, nor in every debate. Moreover, I would not advise you to speak again upon public matters for fome time, perhaps a month or two; but I mean, never lose view of that great object; pursue it with discretion, but pursue it always. Pelotez en attendant partie. You know I have always told you, that speaking in public was but a knack, which those who apply to most, will succeed in best. Two old Members, very good judges, have fent me compliments upon this occasion; and have affured me, that they plainly find it will do: though they perceived, from that natural confusion you were in, that you neither faid all, nor perhaps what you intended. Upon the whole, you have fet out very well, and have sufficient encouragement to go on. Attend therefore

th pa ex fti it

bu yo

ter

ve

in fro lig an ion

non

uch

lad

of

in-

the

ing

to

d of rort

and fet

-101

273

rie. last, uid ver,

blie

but ne it a comnich Two omme, perthat ded.
and

fore

therefore affiduously, and observe carefully all that passes in the House; for it is only knowledge and experience that can make a debater. But if you still want comfort, Mrs.—, I hope, will administer it to you; for in my opinion she may, if she will, be very comfortable: and with women, as with speaking in Parliament, perseverance will most certainly prevail, sooner or later.

What little I have played for here, I have won; but that is very far from the considerable sum which you heard of. I play every evening from seven till ten, at a crown whist party, merely to save my eyes from reading or writing for three hours by candle-light. I propose being in town the week after next, and hope to carry back with me much more health than I brought down here. Good night.

Mr. Stanhope being returned to England, and feeing his Father almost every day, is the occasion of an interruption of two years in their correspondence.

LETTER CCCXV.

fe

W

in tl

a

C

fe

W

q

f

d

Bath, November the 15th, 1756. MY DEAR FRIEND,

Y Received yours yesterday morning, together with A the Prussian papers, which I have read with great attention. If Courts could blush, those of Vienna and Dresden ought, to have their falsehoods so publicly and fo undeniably exposed. The former will, I presume, next year, employ an hundred thousand men, to answer the accusation; and if the Empres of the Two Russias is pleased to argue in the same cogent manner, their logic will be too strong for all the King of Prussia's rhetoric. I well remember the treaty fo often referred to in those pieces, between the two Empresses, in 1746. The King was strongly pressed by the Empress Queen to accede to it. Wassenaer communicated it to me for that purpose. I asked him if there were no secret articles; suspecting that there were some, because the ostensible treaty was a mere harmless, defensive one. He asfured me there were none. Upon which I told him, that as the King had already defensive alliances with those two Empresses, I did not see of what use his accession to this treaty, if merely a defensive one, could be, either to himself or the other contracting parties; but that, however, if it was only defired as an indication of the King's good-will, I would give him an act, by which his majesty should accede to that treaty, as far, but no farther, as at prefent he flood engaged to the respective Empresses, by the defensive alliances subsisting with each. This offer by no means means satisfied him; which was a plain proof of the secret articles now brought to light, and into which the Court of Vienna hoped to draw us. I told Wassenaer so, and after that I heard no more of his invitation.

56.

ith

eat

na b-

116 nd efs

ne

all he

en

g.

it.

A-ole

af-

m,

th iis

ld

5:

li-

m

at od ve no

ns

I am still bewildered in the changes at Court, of which I find that all the particulars are not yet fixed. Who would have thought, a year ago, that Mr. Fox, the Chancellor, and the Duke of Newcastle, should all three have quitted together? nor can I yet account for it; explain it to me, if you can. I cannot see, neither, what the Duke of Devonshire and Fox, whom I looked upon as intimately united, can have quarrelled about, with relation to the Treasury; inform me, if you know. I never doubted of the prudent versatility of your Vicar of Bray; but I am surprised at Obrien Windham's going out of the Treasury, where I should have thought that the interest of his brother-in-law, George Grenville, would have kept him.

Having found myself rather worse, these two or three last days, I was obliged to take some ipecacuana last night; and, what you will think odd, for a vomit, I brought it all up again in about an hour, to my great satisfaction and emolument, which is seldom the case in restitutions.

You did well to go to the Duke of Newcastle, who, I suppose, will have no more levees; however, go from time to time, and leave your name at his door, for you have obligations to him. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXVI.

Bath, December the 14th, 1756. MY DEAR FRIEND,

THAT can I fay to you from this place, where every day is still but as the first, though by no means fo agreeably passed, as Anthony describes his to have been? The fame nothings succeed one another every day with me, as regularly and uniformly as the hours of the day. You will think this tiresome, and so it is; but how can I help it? Cut off from fociety by my deafness, and dispirited by my ill health, where could I be better? You will fay, perhaps, where could you be worse? Only in prison, or the galleys, I confess. However I see a period to my flay here; and I have fixed, in my own mind, a time for my return to London; not invited there by either politics or pleasures (to both which I am equally a stranger) but merely to be at home; which, after all, according to the vulgar faying, is home, be it never so homely.

The political settlement, as it is called, is, I find, by no means settled: Mr. Fox, who took this place in his way to his brother's, where he intended to pass a month, was stopped short by an express, which he received from his connection, to come to town immediately; and accordingly he fet out from hence very early, two days ago. I had a very long converfation with him, in which he was, feemingly at least, very frank and communicative: but still I own myself in the dark. In those matters, as in most others, half knowledge (and mine is at most that) is more apt to lead one into error, than to carry

car

to tru

oft

pri

Ri de du

gr eu

Au

the 1

he

she

ma

fai

tin

fro

m

carry one to truth; and our own vanity contributes to the seduction. Our conjectures pass upon us for truths; we will know what we do not know, and often, what we cannot know: so mortifying to our pride is the bare suspicion of ignorance!

5.

re

10

18

0-ly

2-

M

11 .1

70

y

e

25

2

1, 25

i,

nae

|-|e ıt

1

n

A

0

y

It has been reported here, that the Empress of Russia is dying; this would be a fortunate event indeed for the King of Prussia, and necessarily produce the neutrality and inaction, at least, of that great Power; which would be a heavy weight taken out of the opposite scale to the King of Prussia. The Augustissian must, in that case, do all herself; for, though France will no doubt promise largely, it will, I believe, perform but scantily; as it desires no better, than that the different powers of Germany should tear one another to pieces.

I hope you frequent all the Courts: a man should make his face familiar there. Long habit produces favour insensibly: and acquaintance often does more than friendship, in that climate, where les beaux sentimens are not the natural growth.

Adieu! I am going to the ball, to fave my eyes from reading, and my mind from thinking.

LETTER CCCXVII.

Bath, January the 12th, 1757-MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Waited quietly, to see when either your leisure, or your inclinations, would allow you to honour me with a letter; and at last I received one this morning, very near a fortnight after you went from

E 6 hence.

hence. You will fay, that you had no news to write me; and that probably may be true; but, without news, one has always fomething to fay to those with whom one desires to have any thing to do.

Your observation is very just with regard to the King of Prussia, whom the most august House of Austria would most unquestionably have poisoned a century or two ago. But now that Terras Aftrea reliquit, Kings and Princes die of natural deaths; even war is pufillanimously carried on in this degenerate age; quarter is given; towns are taken, and the people spared: even in a storm, a woman can hardly hope for the benefit of a rape. Whereas (such was the humanity of former days) prisoners were killed by thousands in cold blood, and the generous victors spared neither man, woman, nor child. Heroic actions of this kind were performed at the taking of Magdebourg. The King of Prussia is certainly now in a fituation that must soon decide his fate, and make him Cæfar or nothing. Notwithstanding the march of the Russians, his greatest danger, in my mind, lies westward. I have no great notion of Apraxin's abilities, and I believe many a Pruffian Colonel would out-general him. But Brown, Piccolomini, Lucchese, and many other veteran officers in the Austrian troops, are respectable enemies.

Mr. Pitt feems to me to have almost as many enemies to encounter as his Prussian Majesty. The late Ministry, and the Duke's party, will, I presume, unite against him and his tory friends: and then quarrel among themselves again. His best, if not his only chance of supporting himself would be, if he had credit enough in the city, to hinder the advancing

ite

ut

ith

he

of

a

en

ate

he

ily

vas

led 810 ac-

of

WO

nd

he

my

of

an ic-

ers

ne-

ne,

en

ot

if id-

ng

vancing of the money to any Administration but his own; and I have met with some people here who think that he has.

I have put off my journey from hence for a week, but no longer. I find I still gain some strength and some stesh here, and therefore I will not cut, while the run is for me.

By a letter which I received this morning from Lady Allen, I observe that you are extremely well with her; and it is well for you to be so, for she is an excellent and warm puff.

A propos (an expression which is commonly used to introduce whatever is unrelative to it) you should apply to some of Lord Holdernesse's people, for the perusal of Mr. Cope's letters. It will not be resused you; and the sooner you have them the better. I do not mean them as models for your manner of writing, but as out-lines of the matter you are to write upon.

If you have not read Hume's Essays, read them; they are four very small volumes; I have just finished, and am extremely pleased with them. He thinks impartially, deep, often new; and, in my mind, commonly just. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXVIII.

Blackheath, September the 17th, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

ORD Holdernesse has been so kind as to communicate to me all the letters which he has received from you hitherto, dated the 15th, 19th, 23d, and 26th August; and also a draught of that which he wrote to you the 9th instant. I am very well pleased with all your letters; and, what is better, I can tell you that the King is fo too; and he faid. but three days ago, to Monfieur Münchausen, He (meaning you) fets out very well, and I like bis letters: provided that, like most of my English Ministers abroad, he does not grow idle bereafter. So that here is both praise to flatter, and a hint to warn you. What Loid Holdernesse recommends to you, being by the King's order, intimates also a degree of approbation; for the blacker ink, and the larger character, show, that his Majesty, whose eyes are grown weaker, intends to read all your letters himself. Therefore, pray do not neglect to get the blackest ink you can; and to make your Secretary enlarge his hand, though d'ailleurs it is a very good one.

Had I been to wish an advantageous situation for you, and a good debut in it, I could not have wished you either, better than both have hitherto proved. The rest will depend entirely upon yourself; and I own, I begin to have much better hopes than I had; for I know, by my own experience, that the more one works, the more willing one is to work. We are all, more or less, des animaux d'habitude. I remember very well, that when I was in business, I wrote four or five hours together every day, more willingly than I should now half an hour; and this is most certain, that when a man has applied himself to bufiness half the day, the other half goes off the more chearfully and agreeably. This I found fo forcibly, when I was at the Hague, that I never tafted company so well, nor was so good company myself, as at the suppers of my post days. I take Hamburgh now,

nov

any

to like

Ca

les

acc

I t

bro

Go

gal

bou

ple

wh

gre

no

wa

I

fho

an

of

dif

Id

fib tu

ne

me

laf

he

I

now, to be le centre du refuge Allemand. If you have any Hanover refugiés among them, pray take care to be particularly attentive to them. How do you like your house? Is it a convenient one? Have the Casserolles been employed in it yet? You will find les petits soupers sins less expensive, and turn to better account, than large dinners for great companies.

I hope you have written to the Duke of Newcastle; I take it for granted, that you have to all your brother Ministers of the northern department. For God's sake be diligent, alert, active, and indefatigable in your business. You want nothing but labour and industry, to be, one day, whatever you please, in your own way.

11

I

d.

He

3;

d,

th

bı

'3

OF

at ds

ay

be gh

or

ed

d.

I

d;

re

re

n-

te

ly

ft

1-

91

y ..

1-

at

h

We think and talk of nothing here but Brest, which is universally supposed to be the object of our great expedition. A great and important object it is. I suppose the affair must be brusqué, or it will not do. If we succeed, it will make France put some water to its wine. As for my own private opinion, I own I rather wish than hope success. However, should our expedition fail, Magnis tamen excidit ausis, and that will be better than our late languid manner of making war.

To mention a person to you whom I am very indifferent about, I mean myself, I vegetate still just as I did when we parted; but I think I begin to be sensible of the autumn of the year, as well as of the autumn of my own life. I seel an internal awkwardness, which in about three weeks I shall carry with me to the Bath, where I hope to get rid of it, as I did last year. The best cordial I could take, would be to hear, from time to time, of your industry and diligence ;

gence; for in that case I should consequently hear of your success. Remember your own motto, Nullum numen abest si sit prudentia. Nothing is truer. Yours.

of

Im

I t

He Per

tw

the

it.

for

by

ma

qu

the

Fü

1:

mi

be

be wh

ufe

thi

me

the

M

no

H

W

Id

the

ef

LETTER CCCXIX.

Blackheath, September the 23d, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received but the day before yesterday your letter of the 3d, from the head-quarters at Selfingen: and, by the way, it is but the second that I have received from you fince your arrival at Hamburgh. Whatever was the cause of your going to the army, I approve of the effect; for I would have you, as much as possible, see every thing that is to be seen. That is the true useful knowledge, which informs and improves us when we are young, and amuses us and others, when we are old, Olim bæc meminisse in. vabit. I could wish that you would (but I know you will not) enter into a book, a short note only, of whatever you fee or hear, that is very remarkable; I do not mean a German album, stuffed with people's names, and Latin fentences; but I mean such a book as, if you do not keep now, thirty years hence you would give a great deal of money to have kept. A propos de bottes, for I am told he always wears his; was his Royal Highness very gracious to you, or not? I have my doubts about it. The neutrality, which he has concluded with Maréchal de Richelieu, will prevent that bloody battle which you expected; but what the King of Prussia will say to it, is another point. He was our only ally; at present, probably we have not one in the world. If the King near

llum

urs.

757-etter

en;

ave

rgh.

my,

, 25

een.

orms

es us

13.

now

y, of

ble;

peo-

ch a ence

cept.

his;

or,

lity,

lieu,

ted;

ano-

pro-

King

ef

of Prussia can get at Monsieur de Soubize's and the Imperial army, before other troops have joined them, I think he will beat them; but what then? He has three hundred thousand men to encounter afterwards. He must submit; but he may say with truth, Si Pergama dextrâ desendi possent—The late action between the Prussians and Russians has only thinned the human species, without giving either party a victory; which is plain by each party's claiming it. Upon my word, our species will pay very dear for the quarrels and ambition of a sew, and those by no means the most valuable part of it. If the many were wifer than they are, the sew must be quieter, and would perhaps be juster and better than they are.

Hamburgh, I find, swarms with Grass, Grässens, Fürsts, and Fürstins, Hocheits, and Durchlaugticheits. I am glad of it, for you must necessarily be in the midst of them; and I am still more glad, that, being in the midst of them, you must necessarily be under some constraint of ceremony; a thing which you do not love, but which is, however, very useful.

I desired you in my last, and I repeat it again in this, to give me an account of your private and domestic life. How do you pass your evenings? Have they, at Hamburgh, what are called at Paris des Maisons, where one goes without ceremony, sups or not, as one pleases? Are you adopted in any society? Have you any rational brother Ministers, and which? What fort of things are your operas? In the tender, I doubt they do not excel; for mein lieber schatz, and the other tendernesses of the Teutonic language, would,

would, in my mind, found but indifferently, fet to fost music; for the bravura parts, I have a very great opinion of them; and das, der donner dich erschlage, must, no doubt, make a tremendously fine piece of recitative, when uttered by an angry here, to the rumble of a whole orchestra, including drums, trumpets, and French-horns. Tell me your whole allotment of the day, in which I hope four hours, at least, are facred to writing; the others cannot be better employed than in liberal pleasures. In short, give me a full account of yourfelf, in your un-ministerial character, your incognito, without your focchi. I love to see those, in whom I interest myself, in their undress, rather than in gala; I know them better fo. I recommend to you, etiam atque etiam, method and order in every thing you undertake. Do you observe it in your accounts? If you do not, you will be a beggar, though you were to receive the appointments of a Spanish Embassador extraordinary, which are a thousand pistoles a month; and in your ministerial business, if you have not regular and stated hours for such and such parts of it, you will be in the hurry and confusion of the Duke of N _____, doing every thing by halves, and nothing well, nor foon. I suppose you have been feasted through the Corps diplomatique at Hamburgh, excepting Monsieur Champeaux; with whom, however, I hope you live poliment et galamment, at all third places.

Lord Loudon is much blamed here for his retraite des dix milles, for it is faid that he had above that number, and might consequently have acted offensively, instead of retreating; especially as his retreat wa:

faic

fup

has

Ro

gra

I p wit

ter

itre

ma

WO

po

the fw

fch

be.

go fta

tru

fin

CZ

t to

ery

dich fine

ero,

ms,

nole

, at

be ort.

ni-

cbi.

, in

et-

ne.

Do

704 ap.

TY.

100

and vill of

no-

gh,

all

uite

hat

n-

eat vas

was contrary to the unanimous opinion (as it is now faid) of the council of war. In our Ministry, I suppose, things go pretty quietly, for the D. of N. has not plagued me this two months. Royal Highness comes over, which I take it for granted he will do very foon, the great push will, I presume, be made at his Grace and Mr. Pitt; but without effect if they agree, as it is visibly their interest to do; and in that case, their Parliamentary thrength will support them against all attacks. You may remember, I faid at first, that the popularity would foon be on the fide of those who opposed the popular Militia Bill; and now it appears so with a vengeance, in almost every county in England, by the tumults and infurrections of the people, who swear that they will not be inlisted. That filly scheme must therefore be dropped, as quietly as may be. Now I have told you all that I know, and almost all that I think, I wish you a good supper and a good-night.

LETTER CCCXX.

Blackheath, September the 30th, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have so little to do, that I am surprised how I can find time to write to you so often. Do not stare at the seeming paradox; for it is an undoubted truth, That the less one has to do, the less time one finds to do it in. One yawns, one procrastinates; one can do it when one will, and therefore one seldom does

does it at all; whereas those who have a great deal of business, must (to use a vulgar expression) buckle to it; and then they always find time enough to do it in. I hope your own experience has, by this time. convinced you of this truth.

I received your last, of the 8th. It is now quite over with a very great man, who will be still a very great man, though a very unfortunate one. He has qualities of the mind that put him above the reach of these missortunes: and if reduced, as perhaps he may, to the marche of Brandenburgh, he will always find in himfelf the comfort, and with all the world the credit, of a philosopher, a legislator, a patron and a professor of arts and sciences. He will only lose the fame of a conqueror; a cruel fame, that arises from the destruction of the human species. Could it be any fatisfaction to him to know, I could tell him, that he is at this time the most popular man in this kingdom; the whole nation being enraged at that neutrality which hastens and completes his ruin. Between you and me, the King was not less enraged at it himself, when he saw the terms of it; and it affected his health more than all that had happened before. Indeed it feems to me a voluntary concession of the very worst that could have happened in the worst event. We now begin to think that our great and fecret expedition is intended for Martinico and St. Domingo; if that be true, and we fucceed in the attempt, we shall recover, and the French lose, one of the most valuable branches of commerce, I mean fugar. The French now supply all the foreign markets in Europe with that commodity, we only supply ourselves with it. This would make us fom Nor tho Fre wit the wei hav I at goo but and

efta

the

be eq

my fica

the int kn ne wi th

> Pi tir at ne

m m fome

al of

e to lo it

me,

uite

very

He

the per-

, he

with tor.

He

me,

cies.

ould

man aged his lefs fit;

hap-

tary

ened that

Mar-

fuc-

ench

erce,

e fo-

, we

C Hs

ome

fome amends for our ill luck, or ill conduct in North America; where Lord Loudon, with twelve thousand men, thought himself no match for the French with but feven; and Admiral Holbourne. with seventeen ships of the line, declined attacking the French, because they had eighteen, and a greater weight of metal, according to the new fea-phrase, which was unknown to Blake. I hear that letters have been fent to both, with very fevere reprimands. I am told, and I believe it is true, that we are negociating with the Corfican, I will not fay rebels, but affertors of their natural rights; to receive them, and whatever form of government they think fit to establish, under our protection, upon condition of their delivering up to us Port Ajaccio; which may be made so strong and so good a one, as to be a full equivalent for the loss of Port Mahon. This is, in my mind, a very good scheme; for though the Corficans are a parcel of cruel and perfidious rascals, they will in this case be tied down to us by their own interest and their own danger; a folid security with knaves, though none with fools. His Royal Highness the Duke is hourly expected here: his arrival will make some bustle; for I believe it is certain, that he is resolved to make a push at the Duke of N. Pitt, and Co; but it will be ineffectual, if they continue to agree, as, to my certain knowledge, they do at present. This Parliament is theirs, catera quis nescit.

Now I have told you all I know, or have heard, of public matters, let us talk of private ones, that more nearly and immediately concern us. Admit me to your fire-fide, in your little room; and as you would converse with me there, write to me for the future from thence. Are you completely nippé yet? Have you formed what the world calls connections; that is, a certain number of acquaintances, whom, from accident or choice, you frequent more than others? Have you either fine or well-bred women there? Y a-t-il quelque bon ton? All fat and fair, I presume; too proud and too cold to make advances, but, at the same time, too well bred, and too warm to reject them, when made by un bonnête homme aver des manieres.

would

Mr. * * is to be married, in about a month, to Miss . . I am very glad of it; for as he will never be a man of the world, but will always lead a domestic and retired life, the feems to have been made on purpose for him. Her natural turn is as grave and domestic as his; and she feems to have been kept by her aunts à la glace, instead of being raised in a hot-bed, as most young ladies are of late. If, three weeks hence, you write him a short compliment of congratulation upon the occasion, he, his mother, and tutti quanti, would be extremely pleased with it. Those attentions are always kindly taken, and cot one nothing but pen, ink, and paper. I confider them as draughts upon good-breeding, where the exchange is always greatly in favour of the drawer. A propos of exchange; I hope you have, with the help of your Secretary, made yourfelf correctly mafter of all that fort of knowledge - Course of Exchange, Agio, Banco, Reichs-Thalers, down to Marien Groschen. It is very little trouble to learn it; it is often of great afe to know it. Good-night, and God bless you!

LETTER

V

nef

afto

kno but

Sus !

hall

ago

ject per

min

Aix

hun

can

Roc

con

pilo

land

Ger

him

faid plie

whi

ope

the

of '

aim

LETTER CCCXXI.

he

t?

m, asi

ES

, 1

ces,

m vet

to ne-

da

EER

5 23

cen

ifed

If.

rent

her,

h it

coft

ider

ex.

. 1

help er of nge, ben.

reat

u!

ER

Blackheath, October the 10th, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

T T is not without fome difficulty that I fnatch this moment of leifure from my extreme idle. ness, to inform you of the present lamentable and aftonishing state of affairs here, which you would know but imperfectly from the public papers, and but partially from your private correspondents. Or fus then-Our invincible Armada, which cost at least half a million, failed, as you know, some weeks ago; the object kept an inviolable fecret : conjectures various, and expectations great. Breft was perhaps to be taken; but Martinico and St. Domingo, at least. When lo! the important island of Aix was taken without the least refistance, seven hundred men made prisoners, and some pieces of cannon carried off. From thence we failed towards Rochefort, which it feems was our main object; and consequently one should have supposed that we had pilots on board who knew all the foundings and landing-places there and thereabouts: but no; for General M - t asked the Admiral if he could land him and the troops near Rochefort? The Admiral said, With great ease. To which the General replied; But can you take us on board again? To which the Admiral answered, That, like all naval operations, will depend upon the wind. If so, said the General, I'll e'en go home again. A Council of War was immediately called, where it was unaaimoufly resolved, that it was adviseable to return; accordingly they are returned. As the expectations of the whole nation had been raised to the highest pitch, the universal disappointment and indignation have rifen in proportion; and I question whether the ferment of men's minds was ever greater. picions, you may be sure, are various and endless: but the most prevailing one is, that the tail of the Hanover neutrality, like that of a comet, extended itself to Rochefort. What encourages this suspicion is, that a French man of war went unmolested through our whole fleet, as it lay near Rochefort. Haddock's whole story is revived; Michel's reprefentations are combined with other circumstances: and the whole together makes up a mass of difcontent, resentment, and even fury, greater than perhaps was ever known in this country before, These are the facts, draw your own conclusions from them: for my part, I am lost in astonishment and conjectures, and do not know where to fix. My experience has shown me, that many things which feem extremely probable, are not true; and many, which feem highly improbable, are true; fo that I will conclude this article, as Josephus does almost every article of his history, with faying, but of this every man will believe as he thinks proper. What a disgraceful year will this be in the annals of this country! May its good genius, if ever it appears again, tear out those sheets, thus stained and blotted by our ignominy!

Our domestic affairs are, as far as I know any thing of them, in the same situation as when I wrote to you last; but they will begin to be in motion upon the approach of the session, and upon the exp flow

Sat Ad

V

affur civil knoespe adul fiting go p pany that tain

will tell y none King
power

filly

H

his R

¥

return of the Duke; whose arrival is most impatiently expected by the mob of London; though not to strow slowers in his way.

ED

eft

ion

her

uf-

fs; the

cion sed

ort.

pre-

ces;

dif-

than fore.

fions

nish-

re to nings

and

: fo

does

, but

What

f this pears

lotted

w any wrote

notion

on the return

I leave this place next Saturday, and London the Saturday following, to be the next day at Bath. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXXII.

London, October the 17th, 1757. MY DEAR FRIEND,

OUR last, of the 30th past, was a very good letter: and I will believe half of what you assure me, that you returned to the Landgrave's civilities. I cannot possibly go farther than half, knowing that you are not lavish of your words, especially in that species of eloquence called the adulatory. Do not use too much discretion, in profiting of the Landgrave's naturalization of you; but go pretty often and feed with him. Chuse the company of your superiors, whenever you can have it; that is the right and true pride. The mistaken and filly pride is, to primer among inferiors.

Hear, O Israel! and wonder. On Sunday morning last, the Duke gave up his commission of Captain General, and his regiment of guards. You will ask me why? I cannot tell you; but I will tell you the causes assigned; which, perhaps, are none of them the true ones. It is said that the King reproached him with having exceeded his powers in making the Hanover Convention; which his R. H. absolutely denied, and threw up thereupon. This is certain, that he appeared at the drawing room at Kenfington, last Sunday after having quitted, and went strait to Windsor; where, his people fay, that he intends to refide quietly, and amuse himself as a private man. But I conjecture that matters will foon be made up again, and that he will resume his employments. You will easily imagine what speculations this event has occasioned in the public; I shall neither trouble you nor myfelf, with relating them; nor would this sheet of paper, or even a quire more, contain them. Some. refine enough, to suspect that it is a concerted quarrel, to juttify somebody to somebody, with regard to the Convention; but I do not believe it.

Vol. IV. F upon.

His R. H.'s people load the Hanover Ministers, and more particularly our friend Munchausen here, with the whole blame; but with what degree of truth I know not. This only is certain, that the whole negotiation of that affair was broached, and carried on, by the Hanover Ministers, and Monsieur Steinberg at Vienna, absolutely unknown to the English Ministers, till it was executed. This affair combined (for people will combine it) with the aftonishing return of our great armament, not only re infeda, but even intentata, makes fuch a jumble of reflections, conjectures, and refinements, that one is weary of hearing them. Our Tacituses and Machiavels go deep, suspect the worst, and perhaps, as they often do, overshoot the mark. For my own part, I fairly confess that I am bewildered, and have not certain postulata enough, not only to found any opinion, but even to form conjectures upon; and this is the language which I think you should hold

h

"

to

a

C

16

P

in n

as

ca

fh

YC

ci

A

vo

con

11 fin

for

yo

th:

cip

wa

his

the

de

M:

not wit

for 1

d

re

at ly

ed

yof

me,

ar-

to

ers,

ere,

of

the

and ieur

the ffair

the only

mble

t one

Ma-

haps,

r my

. and found

pon;

hould

hold

hold to all who speak to you, as to be sure all will, upon that subject. Plead, as you truly may, your own ignorance; and fay, that it is impossible to judge of those nice points, at such a distance, and without knowing all circumstances, which you cannot be supposed to do. And as to the Duke's refignation; you should, in my opinion, say, that perhaps there might be a little too much vivacity in the case; but that, upon the whole, you make no doubt of the thing's being foon fet right again; as, in truth, I dare fay it will. Upon these delicate occasions you must practife the ministerial fhrugs and persiflage; for filent gesticulations, which you would be most inclined to, would not be fufficient : fomething must be faid ; but that fomething, when analysed, must amount to nothing. As for instance, Il est vrai qu'on s'y perd, mais que voulez vous que je vous dise, -il y a bien du pour et du contre, un petit Resident ne voit gueres le fond du sac.-Il faut attendre .- Those fort of expletives are of infinite use; and nine people in ten think they mean something. But to the Landgrave of Hesse, I think you would do well to fay, in feeming confidence, that you have good reason to believe, that the principal objection of his Majesty to the Convention was, that his Highness's interests, and the affair of his troops, were not sufficiently considered in it! To the Prussian Minister, affert boldly, that you know de science certaine, that the principal object of his Majesty's, and his British Ministry's attention, is not only to perform all their present engagements with his Master, but to take new and stronger ones for his support; for this is true—at least at present.

F 2

100 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

You did very well in inviting Comte Bothmar to dine with you. You fee how minutely I am informed of your proceedings, though not from yourfelf. Adieu.

I go to Bath next Saturday; but direct your letters, as usual, to London.

LETTER CCCXXIII.

Bath, October the 26th, 1757.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Arrived here safe, but far from found, last Sun-A day. I have consequently drank these waters but three days, and yet I find myself something better for them. The night before I left London, I was for some hours at Newcastle-house; where the letters which came in that morning, lay upon the table; and his Grace fingled out your's, with great approbation, and at the same time assured me of his Majesty's approbation too. To these two approbations, I truly add my own, which, fans vanité, may perhaps be near as good as the other two. In that letter you venture vos petits raisonnemens very properly, and then as properly make an excuse for doing fo. Go on fo with diligence, and you will be, what I began to despair of your ever being, somebody. I am persuaded, if you would own the truth, that you feel yourfelf now much better fatished wish yourfelf, than you were while you did nothing

Application to business, attended with approbation and success, flatters and animates the mind; which,

:

i

I

e

q

I H in

P

th

is

ex

en

of an

ctl

to plo

his

he

and

in

lov

mo

pec

of i

he

Hai

to I

in idleness and inaction, stagnates and putrefies. I could wish, that every rational man would, every night when he goes to bed, ask himself this question, What have I done to-day? Have I done any thing that can be of use to myself or others? Have I employed my time, or have I squandered it? Have I lived out the day, or have I dozed it away in floth and lazinefs? A thinking Being must be pleased or confounded, according as he can answer himself these questions. I observe that you are in the secret of what is intended, and what Munchausen is gone to Stade to prepare. A bold and dangerous experiment, in my mind; and which may probably end in a second volume to the History of the Palatinate, in the last century. His Serene Highness of Brunswick has, in my mind, played a prudent and a faving game; and I am apt to believe, that the other Serene Highness, at Hamburgh, is more likely to follow his example, than to embark in the great scheme.

I fee no figns of the Duke's resuming his employments; but, on the contrary, I am affured, that his Majesty is coolly determined to do as well as he can without him. The Duke of Devonshire and Fox have worked hard to make up matters in the closet, but to no purpose. People's felflove is very apt to make them think themselves more necessary than they are; and I shrewdly sufpect, that his Royal Highness has been the dupe of that fentiment, and was taken at his word when he least expected it : like my predecessor, Lord Harrington; who, when he went into the closet to refign the feals, had them not about him; fo

F 3

fure

our

to

in-ur-

57.

unbut tter was letthe reat

e of pronité,

In very e for will eing, the r faa did

ation hich. in 102 LORD CHESTERFFELD'S LETTERS fure he thought himself of being pressed to keep them.

The whole talk of London, of this place, and of every place in the whole kingdom, is of our great, expensive, and yet fruitless expedition: I have seen an Officer who was there, a very fensible and observ. ing man; who told me, that had we attempted Rochefort, the day after we took the island of Aix, our fuccess had been infallible; but that after we had fauntered (God knows why) eight or ten days in the island, he thinks the attempt would have been impracticable; because the French had in that time got together all the troops in that neighbourhood, to a very considerable number. In short, there must have been some secret in that whole affair, which has not yet transpired; and I cannot help suspecting that it came from Stade. We had not been successful there; perhaps we were not defirous, that an expedition, in which we had neither been concerned nor consulted. should prove so: M-t was our creature; and a word to the wife will fometimes go a great way. M-t is to have a public trial, from which the Public expects great discoveries-Not I.

Do you visit Soltikow, the Russian Minister, whose house, I am told, is the great scene of pleasures at Hamburgh? His mistress, I take it for granted, is by this time dead, and he wears some other body's shackles. Her death comes, with regard to the King of Prussia, comme la moutarde après diner. I am curious to see what tyrant will succeed her, not by Divine, but by Military right; for, barbarous as they are now, and still more barbarous as they have been formerly, they have had very little regard to the more barbarous barbarous notion of divine, indefeasible, hereditary right.

ep

of at,

en

Ved ix.

ad

he

m-gct

ave not t it

in

ed,

ord

-1

ex-

ofe

s at

by ly's

ing

cu-

Dihey

een

ore

ous

The Prætorian bands, that is the guards, I prefume, have been engaged in the interests of the Imperial Prince; but still I think that little John of Archangel will be heard of upon this occasion, unless prevented by a quieting draught of Hemlock or Nightshade; for I suppose they are not arrived to the politer and genteeler poisons of Acqua Tufana*, sugar-plums, Lord Halifax has accepted his old employment, with the honorary addition of the Cabinet Council.

And so we heartily wish you a good night.

LETTER CCCXXIV.

Bath, November the 4th, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

THE sons of Britain, like those of Noah, must cover their parent's shame as well as they can; for to retrieve its honour is now too late. One would really think that our Ministers and Generals were all as drunk as the Patriarch was. However, in your situation, you must not be Cham; but spread your cloak over our disgrace, as far as it will go. M—t calls aloud for a public trial; and in that, and that only, the Public agrees with him. There will certainly be one; but of what kind, is not yet fixed.

Acqua Tufana, a Neapolitan flow poison, resembling clear water, and invented by a woman at Naples, of the name of Tufana.

104 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Some are for a Parliamentary inquiry, others for a Martial one: neither will, in my opinion, discover the true fecret; for a fecret there most unquestion. ably is. Why we staid fix whole days in the island of Aix, mortal cannot imagine; which time the French employed, as it was obvious they would, in assembling all their troops in the neighbourhood of Rochefort, and making our attempt then really impracticable. The day after we had taken the island of Aix, your friend, Colonel Wolfe, publicly offered to do the bufiness with five hundred men and three ships only. In all these complicated political machines, there are fo many wheels within wheels, that it is always difficult, and fometimes impossible, to guess which of them gives direction to the whole. Mr. Pitt is convinced that the principal wheel, or, if you will, the Spoke in his auheel, came from Stade. This is certain, at least, that M-t was the man of confidence with that person. Whatever be the truth of the case, there is, to be fure, hitherto, an Hiatus valde de. Aendus.

The meeting of the Parliament will certainly be very numerous, were it only from curiofity; but the majority on the fide of the Court will, I dare fay, be a great one. The people of the late Captain General, however inclined to oppofe, will be obliged to concur. Their commissions, which they have no defire to lose, will make them tractable; for those Gentlemen, though all men of honour, are of Sosia's mind; que le vrai Amphitrion est celui ou l'on dine. The Tories, and the City, have engaged to support Pitt; the Whigs, the Duke of Newcastle; the independent, and the impartial, as you well know, are

no

me

it

E ra

fu

di

Si

C

de

R

b

T

a

.

ver

on-

of

ch

ng

rt,

le.

ur

ų-

ly.

ire

if-

of

n-

be

r-

ce

e,

le.

be

he

be

2-

to

e-ſe

's

1.

rt

e-

re

OR

not worth mentioning. It is faid that the Duke intends to bring the affair of his convention into Parliament, for his own justification : I can hardly believe it; as I cannot conceive that transactions so merely Electoral can be proper objects of inquiry or deliberation for a British Parliament; and therefore, should fuch a motion be made, I prefume it will be immediately quashed. By the commission lately given to Sir John Ligonier, of General and Commander in Chief of all his Majesty's forces in Great Britain, the door feems to be not only shut, but bolted, against his Royal Highness's return; and I have good reason to be convinced, that that breach is irreparable. The reports of changes in the Ministry, I am pretty sure. are idle and groundless. The Duke of Newcastle and Mr. Pitt really agree very well; not, I presume, from any fentimental tenderness for each other, but from a sense that it is their mutual interest; and, as the late Captain General's party is now out of the question, I do not fee what should produce the least change.

The visit, lately made to Berlin, was, I dare say, neither a friendly nor an inoffensive one. The Austrians always leave behind them pretty lasting monuments of their visits, or rather visitations; not so much, I believe, from their thirst of glory, as from their hunger of prey.

This winter, I take for granted, must produce a peace of some kind or another; a bad one for us, no doubt, and yet perhaps better than we should get the year after. I suppose the King of Prussia is negotiating with France, and endeavouring by those means to get out of the scrape, with the loss only of Silesia, and perhaps Halberstadt, by way of indemnisication to Saxony; and, considering all circumstances, he would be well off upon those terms. But then how is Sweden to be satisfied? Will the Russians restore Memel? Will France have been at all this expence gratis? Must there be no acquisition for them in Flanders? I dare fay they have stipulated something of that fort for themselves, by the additional and fecret treaty, which I know they made, last May. with the Queen of Hungary. Must we give up whatever the French please to defire in America, besides the cession of Minorca in perpetuity? I fear we must, or else raise twelve millions more next year, to as little purpose as we did this, and have consequently a worse peace afterwards. I turn my eyes away, as much as I can, from this miserable prospect; but, as a citizen and member of fociety, it recurs to my imagination, notwithstanding all my endeavours to banish it from my thoughts. I can do myself or my country no good: but I feel the wretched fituation of both: the state of the latter makes me better bear that of the former; and, when I am called away from my flation here, I shall think it rather (as Cicero fays of Craffus) Mors donata quam vita erepta.

F 5

I have often defired, but in vain, the favour of being admitted into your private apartment at Hamburgh, and of being informed of your private life there. Your mornings, I hope and believe, are employed in business; but give me an account of the remainder of the day, which I suppose is, and ought to be, appropriated to amusements and pleasures. In what houses are you domestic? Who are so in yours? In short, let me in, and do not be denied to me.

Here

ir

n

I

I

0 j

n

d

Here I am, as usual, seeing few people, and hearing fewer; drinking the waters regularly to a minute, and am fomething the better for them. I read a great deal, and vary occasionally my dead company. I converse with grave folios in the morning, while my head is clearest, and my attention strongest; I take up less severe quartos after dinner : and at night I chuse the mixed company and amufing chit-chat of octavos and duodecimos. Je tire parti de tout ce que je puis; that is my philosophy; and I mitigate, as much as I can, my phyfical ills, by diverting my attention to other objects.

Here is a report that Admiral Holbourne's fleet is destroyed, in a manner, by storm: I hope it is not true, in the full extent of the report; but I believe it has suffered. This would fill up the measure of our misfortunes. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXXV.

Bath, November the 20th, 1757. MY DEAR FRIEND.

Write to you now, because I love to write to you; and hope that my letters are welcome to you; for otherwise I have very little to inform you of. The King of Prussia's late victory, you are better informed of than we are here. It has given infinite joy to the unthinking public, who are not aware that it comes too late in the year, and too late in the war, to be attended with any very great consequences. There are fix or feven thousand of the human species less the ght In irs ?

F 6

he

w ore

ce

in

ng

nd

ay,

atdes

sft,

25

tly

23 ut.

my

to my ion car

way CE-

of

am-

life

em-

. lere.

th

la

W

O

th

th

h

I

P

n

a

t

f

1

than there were a month ago, and that feems to me to be all. However, I am glad of it upon account of the pleasure and the glory which it gives the King of Prussia, to whom I wish well as a Man, more than as a King. And furely he is so great a man, that had he lived seventeen or eighteen hundred years ago. and his life been transmitted to us in a language that we could not very well understand, I mean either Greek or Latin, we should have talked of him as we do now of your Alexanders, your Cæfars, and others, with whom, I believe, we have but a very flight acquaintance. Aureste, I do not fee that his affairs are much mended by this victory. The same combination of the great Powers of Europe against him still fublifts, and must at last prevail. I believe the French army will melt away, as is usual, in Germany; but his army is extremely diminished by battles, fatigues, and defertion; and he will find great difficulties in recruiting it, from his own already exhausted dominions. He must therefore, and to be sure will, negotiate privately with the French, and get better terms that way than he could any other.

The report of the three General Officers, the Duke of Marlborough, Lord George Sackville, and General Waldegrave, was laid before the King last Saturday, after their having fat four days upon M—t's affair: nobody yet knows what it is; but it is generally believed, that M—t will be brought to a Court-Martial. That you may not mistake this matter, as most people here do, I must explain to you, that this examination, before the three above-mentioned General Officers, was by no means a trial; but only a previous

10

nt

ng

an

at 0,

at

er

ve

S.

C-

21 aill

ch

ut

in

Cr

11, er

ke

ral

y,

r:

e-

11-

er,

ed

ly

us

a previous inquiry into his conduct, to fee whether there was, or was not, cause to bring him to a regular trial before a Court-martial. The case is exactly parallel to that of a grand jury; who, upon a previous and general examination, find, or do not find, a bill, to bring the matter before the petty jury; where the fact is finally tried. For my own part, my opinion is fixed upon that affair: I am convinced that the expedition was to be defeated; and nothing that can appear before a Court-martial can make me alter that opinion. I have been too long acquainted with human nature, to have great regard for human testimony: and a very great degree of probability, fupported by various concurrent circumstances, conspiring in one point, will have much greater weight with me, than human testimony upon oath, or even upon honour; both which I have frequently feen confiderably warped by private views.

The Parliament, which now stands prorogued to the first of next month, it is thought, will be put off for some time longer, till we know in what light to lay before it the state of our alliance with Prussia, since the conclusion of the Hanover neutrality; which, if it did not quite break it, made at least a great slaw in it.

The birth-day was neither fine nor crowded; and no wonder, fince the King was that day seventy five. The old Court and the young one are much better together, since the Duke's retirement; and the King has presented the Prince of Wales with a service of plate.

I am still unwell, though I drink these waters very regularly.

regularly. I will stay here at least fix weeks longer, where I am much quieter than I should be allowed to be in town. When things are in such a miserable situation as they are at present, I desire neither to be concerned nor consulted, still less quoted. Adieu!

po

yea

Co

pir

lat bu fcr

on aff

C

ou

gr

th if

m W

fe

yo

F

u

le

b

2:

S

ii

a

te

LETTER CCCXXVI.

Bath, November the 26th, 1757.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received, by the last mail, your short account of the King of Prussia's victory; which victory, contrary to custom, turns out more complete than it was at first reported to be. This appears by an intercepted letter from Monsieur de St. Germain to Monsieur d'Affry, at the Hague; in which he tells him, Cette armée eft entierement fondue, and lays the blame, very strongly, upon Monsieur de Soubize. But, be it greater, or be it less, I am glad of it; because the King of Prussia (whom I honour and almost adore) I am fure is. Though d'ailleurs, between you and me, ou eft-ce que cela mene? To nothing, while that formidable union, of the three great Powers of Europe, subfifts against him. Could that be any way broken, fomething might be done; without which, nothing can. I take it for granted, that the King of Prussia will do all he can to detach France. should not we, on our part, try to detach Russia? At least, in our present distress, omnia tentanda, and fometimes a lucky and unexpected hit turns up. This thought came into my head this morning; and I give it to you, not as a very probable scheme, but as a possible er, ble

be

!

of

on-

was pt-

eur

ette

ery

it

the re)

ind hat

vay

ch,

of

hy

At

nd

his ive

s a

possible one, and consequently worth trying-The year of the Russian subsidies (nominally paid by the Court of Vienna, but really by France) is near expired. The former probably cannot, and perhaps the latter will not, renew them. The court of Petersburgh is beggarly, profuse, greedy, and by no means fcrupulous. Why should not we step in there, and out-bid them? If we could, we buy a great army at once; which would give an entire new turn to the affairs of that part of the world, at least. And if we bid handsomely, I do not believe the bonne foi of that Court would stand in the way. Both our Court and our Parliament would, I am very fure, give a very great sum, and very chearfully, for this purpose. In the next place, Why should not you wriggle yourself, if possible, into so great a scheme? You are, no doubt, much acquainted with the Russian Resident Soltikow; Why should not you found him, as intirely from yourfelf, upon this subject ? You may alk him, What, does your Court intend to go on next year in the pay of France, to destroy the liberties of all Europe, and throw universal monarchy into the hands of that already great and always ambitious power? I know you think, or at least call yourselves, the allies of the Empress Queen; but is it not plain that she will be, in the first place, and you in the next, the dupes of France? At this very time you are doing the work of France and Sweden; and that for some miserable subsidies, much inferior to those which I am sure you might have, in a better cause, and more confistent with the true interest of Russia. Though not empowered, I know the manner of thinking of my own Court fo well, upon upon this subject, that I will venture to promise you much better terms than those you have now, without the least apprehensions of being disavowed. Should he litten to this, and what more may occur to you to fay upon this subject, and ask you, En écrirai-je à ma Cour? Answer him, Ecrivez, écrivez, Monfieur, bar. diment. Je prendrai tout cela sur moi. Should this happen, as perhaps, and as I heartily wish it may, then write an exact relation of it to your own Court. Tell them, that you thought the measure of such great importance, that you could not help taking this little step towards bringing it about; but that you mentioned it only as from yourfelf, and that you have not in the least committed them by it. tikow lends himself in any degree to this, infinuate, that, in the present situation of affairs, and particularly of the King's Electoral dominions, you are very fure that his Majesty would have une reconnoissance sans bornes for all those, by whose means so desirable a revival of an old and long friendship should be brought about. You will perhaps tell me, that without doubt Mr. Keith's instructions are to the same effect : but I will answer you, that you can, if you please, do it better than Mr. Keith; and, in the next place, that, be all that as it will, it must be very advantageous to you at home, to show that you have at least a contriving head, and an alertness in business.

I had a letter, by the last post, from the Duke of Newcastle; in which he congratulates me, in his own name, and in Lord Hardwicke's, upon the approbation which your dispatches give, not only to them two, but to others. This success, so early, should encourage

cou

vou

fire

the

vio

WI

de tha

do wi

fu

pl

he

fe

m

I

ca

]

HOL

out

uld

I to

ma

ar-

his

ay,

rt.

ich

ng

hat

Ou

ol-

te,

uery

ans

re-

ht

ibt

it at,

to n-

of

ND

12-

m

n-

ge

courage your diligence, and rouze your ambition, if you have any; you may go a great way, if you defire it, having so much time before you.

I fend you here enclosed the copy of the Report of the three General Officers, appointed to examine previously into the conduct of General M—t; it is ill written, and ill spelled; but no matter; you will decypher it. You will observe, by the tenour of it, that it points strongly to a Court-martial; which, no doubt, will soon be held upon him. I presume there will be no shooting in the final sentence; but I do suppose that there will be breaking, &c.

I have had some severe returns of my old complaints, last week, and am still unwell; I cannot help it.

A friend of yours arrived here three days ago; she seems to me to be a serviceable strong-bodied bay mare, with black mane and tail; you easily guess who I mean. She is come with mamma, and without il caro sposo.

Adieu! my head will not let me go on longer.

LETTER CCCXXVII.

Bath, December the 31st, 1757.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have this moment received your letter of the 18th, with the enclosed papers. I cannot help observing, that, till then, you never acknowledged the receipt of any one of my letters.

I can easily conceive that party spirit, among your brother Ministers at Hamburgh, runs as high as you represent represent it, because I can easily believe the errors of the human mind; but at the same time I must observe. that fuch a spirit is the spirit of little minds, and fubaltern Ministers, who think to atone by zeal, for their want of merit and importance. The political differences of the feveral Courts should never influence the personal behaviour of their several Ministers towards one another. There is a certain procede noble et galant, which should always be observed among the Ministers of Powers even at war with each other, which will always turn out to the advantage of the ablest; who will in those conversations find or make opportunities of throwing out, or of receiving useful hints. When I was last at the Hague, we were at war with both France and Spain; fo that I could neither visit, nor be visited by, the Ministers of those two Crowns: but we met every day, or dined at third places, where we embraced as personal friends, and trifled, at the same time, upon our being political enemies; and by this fort of badinage, I difcovered some things which I wanted to know. There is not a more prudent maxim, than to live with one's enemies as if they may one day become one's friends; as it commonly happens, fooner or later, in the viciffitudes of political affairs.

To your question, which is a rational and prudent one, Whether I was authorized to give you the hints concerning Russia, by any people in power here; I will tell you that I was not: but, as I had pressed them to try what might be done with Russia, and got Mr. Keith to be dispatched thither some months sooner than otherwise, I dare say, he would, with the proper instructions for that purpose, I wished,

that

that ftart

that with plac

to g

a N

to h je m qu'a

W

tha

wh

An

the tha

ha

fia

al

an

of

of

tw

R

to

ca

ti

01 ir

f fi

s of

rve.

and

for ical flu-ters

oble

the

the ake

ful

at ei-

ofe

at ds.

iti-

dif-

ere e's

ds;

Vi-

ent

nts

; [

Ted

got ths

ith

ed.

hat

that by the hints I gave you, you might have got the flart of him, and the merit, at least, of having entamé that matter with Soltikow. What you have to do with him now, when you meet with him at any third place, or at his own house (where you are at liberty to go, while Russia has a Minister in London, and we Minister at Petersburgh) is, in my opinion, to say to him, in an easy chearful manner, He bien, Monsieur, je me flatte que nous serons bien-tôt amis publics, austi bien ou'amis personels. To which he will probably ask, Why, or how? You will reply, Because you know that Mr. Keith is gone to his Court with instructions, which you think must necessarily be agreeable there. And throw out to him, that nothing but a change of their present system can save Livonia to Russia; for, that he cannot suppose, that, when the Swedes shall have recovered Pomerania, they will long leave Rufha in quiet possession of Livonia. If he is so much a Frenchman as you fay, he will make some weak answers to this; but as you will have the better of the argument on your fide, you may remind him of the old and almost uninterrupted connection between France and Sweden, the inveterate enemy of Russia. Many other arguments will naturally occur to you in such a conversation, if you have it. In this case, there is a piece of ministerial art, which is sometimes of use; and that is, to sow jealousies among one's enemies, by a feeming preference shown to some one of them. Monsieur Hecht's reveries are reveries indeed. How should his master have made the golden arrangements, which he talks of, and which are to be forged into shackles for General Fermor? The Prusfian finances are not in a condition now to make fuch expensive expensive arrangements. But I think you may tell Monsieur Hecht, in considence, that you hope the instructions with which you know that Mr. Keith is gone to Petersburgh, may have some effect upon the measures of that Court.

I would advise you to live with that same Monsieur Hecht, in all the confidence, familiarity, and connection, which prudence will allow. I mean it with regard to the King of Prussia himself, by whom I could wish you to be known and esteemed as much as poff. ble. It may be of use to you some day or other. If man, courage, conduct, constancy, can get the better of all the difficulties which the King of Prussia has to struggle with, he will rise superior to them. But still, while this alliance subsists against him, I dread les gros Escadrons. His last victory, of the 5th, was certainly the compleatest that has been heard of these many years. I heartily wish the Prince of Brunswick just such a one over Monsieur de Richelieu's army; and that he may take my old acquaintance the Maréchal, and fend him over here to polish and perfume us.

I heartily wish you, in the plain home-spun style, a great number of happy new years, well employed in forming both your mind and your manners, to be useful and agreeable to yourself, your country, and your friends! That these wishes are sincere, your Secretary's brother will, by the time of your receiving this, have remitted you a proof, from Yours.

LETTER

I

M

TR

th

the 2

which

been

one,

of Pr

has j

Fran

purp

come

their

ing t

Fren

Fren

alk I

ter t

Liffa

men

fpair

Kin

whe

ralit

fian mou fend

LETTER CCCXXVIII.

London, February the 8th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

T Received by the same post your two letters of I the 13th and 17th past; and yesterday that of the 27th, with the Russian manifesto enclosed; in which her Imperial Majetty of all the Russias has been pleased to give every reason, except the true one, for the march of her troops against the King of Prussia. The true one, I take to be, that she has just received a very great sum of money from France, or the Empress Queen, or both, for that purpose. Point d'argent point de Russe is now become a maxim. Whatever may be the motive of their march, the effects must be bad; and according to my speculations, those troops will replace the French, in Hanover and Lower Saxony; and the French will go and join the Austrian army. You ask me, If I still despond? Not so much as I did after the battle of Colen: the battles of Rosbach and Lissa were drams to me, and gave me some momentary spirits; but though I do not absolutely despair, I own I greatly distrust. I readily allow the King of Prussia to be nec pluribus impar; but still, when the places amount to a certain degree of plurality, courage and abilities must yield at last. Michel here assures me, that he does not mind the Rusfians; but as I have it from the gentleman's own . mouth, I do not believe him. We shall very soon fend a squadron to the Baltic, to entertain the Swedes; which tell the th is

ER

the

fieur

nec.

n re-

ould

ooffi.

. If

etter

as to

But

read

Was

thefe wick

my;

the pertyle,

oyed

to be

and your ving

which I believe will put an end to their operations in Pomerania; so that I have no great apprehensions from that quarter; but Russia, I confess, slicks in my slomach.

Every thing goes smoothly in Parliament; the King of Prussia has united all our parties in his sup. port; and the Tories have declared, that they will give Mr. Pitt unlimited credit for this fession: there has not been one fingle division yet upon public points, and I believe will not. Our American ex. pedition is preparing to go foon; the disposition of that affair feems to me a little extraordinary. Abercrombie is to be the sedentary, and not the acting Commander; Amherst, Lord Howe, and Wolfe, are to be the acting, and I hope the active Officers. I wish they may agree. Amherst, who is the oldest officer, is under the influence of the same great person who influenced Mordaunt, so much to the honour and advantage of this country. This is most certain, that we have force enough in America to eat up the French alive in Canada, Quebec, and Louisbourg, if we have but skill and spirit enough

When you come to the egotism, which I have long desired you to come to with me, you need make no excuses for it. The egotism is as proper and as satisfactory, to one's friends, as it is impertinent and misplaced with strangers. I desire to see you in your every-day's clothes, by your fire-side, in your pleasures; in short, in your private life; but I have not yet been able to obtain this. Whenever to exert it properly; but of that I am modest enough to doubt.

you

you

trut

per.

of I

eve

the pre

obv

end hov

fian

be fen

hay

Bu

tion

bel

apo

der

his

fho

and tha

tha

his

for you condescend to do it, as you promise, stick to truth; for I am not so uninformed of Hamburgh, as perhaps you may think.

in ons

in

the

up-

will

on:

blic

ex-

tion

ary.

the

and

Clive

ho is fame ch to his is erica

and ough

ough

have need roper

mper-

to fee

de, in

; but

never

As for myself, I am very unwell, and very weary of being so; and with little hopes, at my age, of ever being otherwise. I often wish for the end of the wretched remnant of my life; and that wish is a rational one; but then the innate principle of self-preservation, wisely implanted in our natures, for obvious purposes, opposes that wish, and makes us endeavour to spin out our thread as long as we can, however decayed and rotten it may be; and in defiance of common-sense, we seek on for that chymic gold, which beggars us when old.

Whatever your amusements, or pleasures, may be at Hamburgh, I dare say you taste them more fensibly than ever you did in your life, now that you have business enough to whet your appetite to them. Bufiness, one half of the day, is the best preparation for the pleasures of the other half. I hope, and believe, that it will be with you as it was with an apothecary whom I knew at Twickenham. A considerable estate fell to him by an unexpected accident; upon which he thought it decent to leave off his business; accordingly he generously gave up his hop and his stock to his head man, fet up his coach, and resolved to live like a gentleman; but in less than a month, the man, used to bufiness, found, that living like a gentleman was dying of ennui: upon which he bought his shop and stock, resumed his trade; and lived very happily, after he had something to do. Adieu.

LETTER

LETTER CCCXXIX.

London, February the 24th, 1758: MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received yesterday your letter of the 2d instant, with the enclosed; which I return you, that there may be no chasm in your papers. I had heard before of Burrish's death, and had taken some steps thereupon; but I very foon dropped that affair, for ninety-nine good reasons; the first of which was, that nobody is to go in his room, and that had he lived, he was to have been recalled from Munich. But another reason, more flattering for you, was, that you could not be spared from Hamburgh. Upon the whole, I am not forry for it, as the place where you are now is the great entrepot of bufiness; and when it ceases to be so, you will necessarily go to some of the Courts in the neighbourhood (Berlin, I hope and believe) which will be a much more defirable fituation than to rust at Munich, where we can never have any business beyond a subsidy. Do but go on, and exert yourfelf where you are, and better things will foon follow.

Surely the inaction of our army at Hanover continues too long. We expected wonders from it some time ago, and yet nothing is attempted. The French will soon receive reinforcements, and then be too strong for us; whereas they are now most certainly greatly weakened by desertion, sickness, and deaths. Does the King of Prussia send a body of men to our army or not? or has the march of the Russians cut him out work for all his troops? I am afraid it has.

If

If c

Mo nia

Th

ma

bav

wh

fay fon

cei

Ha

nex

mo

the

at

Job

col

to

you

had thr

he

If one body of Russians joins the Austrian army in Moravia, and another body the Swedes in Pomerania, he will have his hands very full, too full, I fear. The French say they will have an army of 180,000 men in Germany this year; the Empress Queen will have 150,000; if the Russians have but 40,000, what can result such a force? The King of Prussia may say, indeed, with more justice than ever any one person could before him, Moi. Medea Superest.

8:

it,

rd ps

10

15,

he h.

as,

on

re

nd to

I le-

we

Do

nd

on-

me

too

nly :

hs.

our

cut

as.

If

You promised me some egotism; but I have received none yet. Do you frequent the Landgrave? Hantez wous les grands de la terre? What are the connexions of the evening? All this, and a great deal more of this kind, let me know in your next.

The House of Commons is still very unanimous: there was a little popular squib let off this week, in a motion of Sir John Glynne's, seconded by Sir John Philips, for annual Parliaments. It was a very cold scent, and put an end to by a division of 190 to 70.

Good night. Work hard, that you may divert yourself well.

LETTER CCCXXX.

London, March the 4th, 1758.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Should have been much more surprised at the contents of your letter of the 17th past, if I had not happened to have seen Sir C. W. about three or sour hours before I received it. I thought he talked in an extraordinary manner; he engaged Vol. 1V.

that the King of Prussia should be master of Vienna in the month of May; and he told me that you were very much in love with his daughter. Your letter explained all this to me; and the next day, Lord and Lady E - gave me innumerable instances of his frenzy, with which I shall not trouble you. What inflamed it the more (if it did not intirely occasion it) was a great quantity of cantharides, which, it feems, he had taken at Hamburgh, to recommend himself, I suppose, to Mademoiselle John. let blood four times on board the ship, and has been let blood four times more fince his arrival here; but still the inflammation continues very high. He is now under the care of his brothers, who do not let him go abroad. They have written to this same Mademoiselle John, to prevent, if they can, her coming to England, and told her the case; which when she hears, she must be as mad as he is, if she takes the journey. By the way, she must be me Dame aventuriere, to receive a note for 10,000 roubles. from a man whom she had known but three days; to take a contract of marriage, knowing he was married already; and to engage herself to follow him to England. I suppose this is not the first adventure of the fort which she has had.

After the news we received yesterday, that the French had evacuated Hanover, all but Hamel, we daily expect much better. We pursue them, we cut them off en détail, and at last we destroy their whole army. I wish it may happen, and, moreover, I think it not impossible.

My head is much out of order, and only allows me to wish you a good night.

LETTER

ir

d

to ta

fo

fo

CI

K

al

P

th

it

W

fil

te

hi

th

fta

LETTER CCCXXXI.

London, March the 22d, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND.

T Have now your letter of the 8th lying before me, with the favourable account of our progress in Lower Saxony, and reasonable prospect of more decisive success. I confess I did not expect this, when my friend Münchausen took his leave of me, to go to Stade, and break the neutrality; I thought it at least a dangerous, but rather a desperate undertaking; whereas, hitherto, it has proved a very fortunate one. I look upon the French army as fondue; and, what with desertion, deaths, and epidemical distempers, I dare fay not a third of it will ever return to France. The great object is now, what the Russians can or will do; and whether the King of Prussia can hinder their junction with the Austrians, by beating either, before they join: I will trust him for doing all that can be done.

Sir C. W. is still in confinement, and, I fear, will always be fo, for he feems cum ratione infanire: the physicians have collected all he has faid and done, that indicated an alienation of mind, and have laid it before him in writing; he has answered it in writing too, and justifies himself by the most plaufible arguments that can possibly be urged. He tells his brother, and the few who are allowed to fee him, that they are fuch narrow and contracted minds themselves, that they take those for mad, who have a great and generous way of thinking; as for instance, when he determined to send his daughter

G 2

ER

e cut hole

nna vere

tter and his

hat

fion

, it

end

Was

been

but

e is t let ame

her hich

the une

bles,

; to

rried

ing-

f the

: the

, we

hink

s me

over to you in a fortnight, to be married without any previous agreement or settlements, it was because he had long known you, and loved you, as a man of fense and honour; and therefore would not treat with you as with an attorney. That as for Mademoiselle John, he knew her merit and her circuma stances; and asks, whether it is a fign of madness, to have a due regard for the one, and a just compassion for the other. I will not tire you with enumerating any more inflances of the poor man's frenzy; but conclude this fubject with pitying him, and poor human nature, which holds its reason by fo precarious a tenure. The lady, who you tell me is fet out, en fera pour la peine et les fraix du voyage; for her note is worth no more than her contract. By the way, she must be a kind of aventuriere, to engage so easily in such an adventure, with a man whom she had not known above a week, and whose dibut of 10,000 roubles showed him not to be in his right fenfes.

You will probably have feen General Yorke, by this time, in his way to Berlin or Breslau, or whereever the King of Prussia may be. As he keeps his commission to the States General, I presume he is not to flay long with his Pruffian Majefty: but, however, while he is there, take care to write to him very constantly, and to give all the informations you can. His father, Lord Hardwicke, is your great puff; he commends your office letters exceedingly. I would have the Berlin commission your object, in good time : never lose view of it. Do all you can to recommend yourfelf to the King of Prussia, on your fide of the water, and to smooth your way for that

CO

of

CO

he

ing

for

the inti

oth

me

mei

I ca

reat

YOU have fau!

be r

than ium!

whic

H

I

commission on this; by the turn which things have taken of late, it must always be the most important of all foreign commissions from hence.

I have no news to fend you, as things here are extremely quiet; fo good night.

LETTER CCCXXXII.

London, April the 25th, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND.

Am now two letters in your debt, which I think is the first time that ever I was fo, in the long coarse of our correspondence. But, besides that my head has been very much out of order of late, writing is by no means that easy thing that it was to me formerly. I find by experience, that the mind and the body are more than married, for they are most intimately united; and when the one fuffers the other sympathises. Non fum qualis eram : Neither my memory nor my invention are now, what they formerly were. It is in a great measure my own fault: I cannot accuse nature, for I abused her; and it is reasonable I should fuffer for it.

I do not like the return of the oppression upon your lungs; but the rigour of the cold may probably have brought it upon you, and your lungs not in fault. Take care to live very cool, and let your diet be rather low.

We have had a fecond winter here, more severe than the first, at least it feemed so, from a premature summer that we had, for a fortnight, in March; which brought every thing forwards, only to be destroyed.

G 3

an to that

y e of at enª

ſs. nu-

n's m.

by me

ge; et.

to nan ofe

his by: ere-

his not ow-

him you reat

gly. t, in your

com-

destroyed. I have experienced it at Blackheath; where the promise of fruit was a most flattering one, and all nipped in the bud by frost and snow, in April. I shall not have a single peach or apricot.

M

(

n

k

fi

th

31

P

p

b

m pl

te

an fro

Mi Bu

of op

mu

fav

I have nothing to tell you from hence, concerning public affairs, but what you read as well in the news-papers. This only is extraordinary; that last week, in the House of Commons, above ten millions were granted, and the whole Hanover army taken into British pay, with but one single negative, which was Mr. Viner's.

Mr. Pitt gains ground in the closet, and yet does not lose it in the public. That is new.

Monsieur Kniphausen has dined with me; he is one of the prettiest sellows I have seen; he has, with a great deal of life and fire, les manieres d'un bonnéts bomme, et le ton de la parfaitement bonne compagnie. You like him yourself; try to be like him: it is in your power.

I hear that Mr. Mitchel is to be recalled, notwithflanding the King of Prussia's instances to keep him. But why, is a secret that I cannot penetrate.

You will not fail to offer the Landgrave, and the Princess of Hesse (who I find are going home) to be their agent and commissioner at Hamburgh.

I cannot comprehend the present state of Russia, nor the motions of their armies. They change their Generals once a week; sometimes they march with rapidity, and now they lie quiet behind the Vistula. We have a thousand stories here of the interior of that government, none of which I believe. Some say, that the Great Duke will be set aside. Woron, zoff is said to be entirely a Frenchman, and that Monsieur

Monfieur de l'Hôpital governs both him and the Court. Sir C. W. is faid, by his indifcretions, to have caused the disgrace of Bestuchef, which seems not impossible. In short, every thing of every kind is faid, because, I believe, very little is truly known. A propos of Sir C. W.; he is out of confinement, and gone to his house in the country for the whole fummer. They fay he is now very cool and well. I have feen his Circe, at her window in Pall-mall; she is painted, powdered, curled, and patched, and looks l'aventure. She has been offered by Sir C. W--'s friends, 5001. in full of all demands, but will not accept of it. La comtesse went plaider, and I fancy faire autre chofe fi elle peut. Jubes te bene valere.

LETTER CCCXXXIII.

Blackheath, May the 18th, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Have your letter of the 5th now before me, and condole with you upon the present solitude and inaction of Hamburgh. You are now shrunk from the dignity and importance of a confummate Minister, to be but, as it were, a common man-But this has, at one time or another, been the cafe of most great men; who have not always had equal opportunities of exerting their talents. The greatest must submit to the capriciousness of fortune; though they can, better than others, improve the favourable moments. For instance, who could have thought,

G4

uffia, their with tula. or of Some oron, that fieur

h.:

ne.

ri!.

rn.

the laft

ons

ken ich-

oce

e is vith

nête mies s in ith-

nim.

the o be ad

the

ca

th ou

F

C

fo

ta

H

21

L

10 fi

n

d

d

e

b

0

li

thought, two years ago, that you would have been the Atlas of the Northern Pole? but the good Genius of the North ordered it so; and now that you have fet that part of the globe right, you return to etium cum dignitate. But to be ferious: now that you cannot have much office bufiness to do, I could tell you what to do, that would employ you, I should think, both usefully and agreeably. I mean, that you should write short memoirs of that busy scene, in which you have been enough concerned, fince your arrival at Hamburgh, to be able to put together authentic facts and anecdotes. I do not know whether you will give yourfelf the trouble to do it or not; but I do know, that if you will, olim bet meminisse juvabit. I would have them short, but correct as to facts and dates.

I have told Alt, in the strongest manner, your lamentations for the loss of the House of Cassel, et il m fera rapport à son Sérénissime Maître. When you are quite idle, (as probably you may be, some time this summer) why should you not ask leave to make a tour to Cassel for a week? which would certainly be granted you from hence, and which would be looked upon as a bon procédé, at Cassel.

The King of Prussia is probably, by this time, at the gates of Vienna, making the Queen of Hungary really do, what Monsieur de Bellisse only threatened; sign a peace upon the ramparts of her capital. If she is obstinate, and will not, she must sly either to Presburgh or to Inspruck, and Vienna must fall. But I think he will offer her reasonable conditions enough for herself; and I suppose, that in that case, Caunitz will be reasonable enough to advise

een

ius

ave

to

hat

, 1

ı, I

an,

ne,

nce

her

he-

OT

ac

or-

la-

en

are

his

e a

be

ed

ne,

of

aly

her uft

na

ble

at

to

ife

advise her to accept of them. What turn would the war take then? Would the French and Russians carry it on without her? the King of Pruffia, and the Prince of Brunswick, would soon sweep them out of Germany. By this time too, I believe, the French are entertained in America, with the loss of Cape Breton; and, in consequence of that, Quebec; for we have a force there equal to both those undertakings, and Officers there, now, that will execute, what Lord L-never would fo much as attempt. His appointments were too considerable to let him do any thing that might possibly put an end to the war. Lord Howe, upon feeing plainly that he was resolved to do nothing, had asked leave to return, as well as Lord Charles Hay.

We have a great expedition preparing, and which will foon be ready to fail from the Isle of Wight; fifteen thousand good troops, eighty battering cannons, besides mortars, and every other thing in abundance, fit for either battle or fiege. Lord Anfon defired, and is appointed, to command the fleet employed upon this expedition; a proof that it is not a trifling one. Conjectures concerning its deftination are infinite; and the most ignorant are, as usual, the boldest conjecturers. If I form any conjectures, I keep them to myself, not to be disproved by the event; but, in truth, I form none: I might have known, but would not.

Every thing feems to tend to a peace next winter: our success in America, which is hardly doubtful, and the King of Prussia's in Germany, which is as little fo, will make France (already fick of the expence of the war) very tractable for a peace. I heartily

G 5

heartily wish it: for, though people's heads are half turned with the King of Prussia's success, and will be quite turned, if we have any in America, or at sea: a moderate peace will suit us better than this immoderate war of twelve millions a year.

Domestic affairs go just as they did; the Duke of Newcastle and Mr. Pitt jog on like man and wise; that is, seldom agreeing, often quarrelling; but by mutual interest, upon the whole, not parting. The latter, I am told, gains ground in the closet; though he still keeps his strength in the House, and his popularity in the public: or, perhaps, because of that.

Do you hold your resolution of visiting your dominions of Bremen and Lubeck this summer? If you do, pray take the trouble of informing yourself correctly of the several constitutions and customs of those places, and of the present state of the sederal union of the Hanseatic towns: it will do you no harm, nor cost you much trouble; and it is so much clear gain on the side of useful knowledge.

I am now settled at Blackheath for the summer; where unseasonable frost and snow, and hot and parching east-winds, have destroyed all my fruit, and almost my fruit-trees. I vegetate myself little better than they do; I crawl about on foot, and on horseback; read a great deal, and write a little: and an very much yours.

fa

H

fe do

th

he

to bo

th

m

ea

W

re

R

in fo

m ev

que po fe

LETTER CCCXXXIV.

Blackheath, May the 30th, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Have no letter from you to answer, so this goes I to you unprovoked. But à propos of letters; you have had great honour done you, in a letter from a fair and Royal hand, no less than that of her Royal Highness the Princess of Cassel: she has written your panegyric to her fifter, Princess Amelia, who fent me a compliment upon it. This has likewise done you no harm with the King, who faid gracious things upon that occasion. I suppose you had, for her Royal Highness, those attentions, which I wish to God you would have, in due proportions, for every body. You see, by this instance, the effects of them; they are always repaid with interest. I am more confirmed by this in thinking, that, if you can conveniently, you should ask leave to go for a week to Cassel, to return your thanks for all favours received.

I cannot expound to myself the conduct of the Russians. There must be a trick in their not marching with more expedition. They have either had a sop from the King of Prussia, or they want an animating dram from France and Austria. The King of Prussia's conduct always explains itself by the events; and, within a very sew days, we must certainly hear of some very great stroke from that quarter. I think I never in my life remember a period of time so big with great events as the present; Within two months, the fat cof the House

G.6

half will

at .

this

uke

and

ng;

art-

the

the per.

do.

? If

rfelf

oms

the

1 do

and

NOW-

ner;

and

ruit.

little

d on

and

of Austria will probably be decided: within the same space of time, we shall certainly hear of the taking of Cape Breton, and of our army's proceeding to Quebec: within a sew days, we shall know the good or ill success of our great expedition; for it is sailed: and it cannot be long before we shall hear something of the Prince of Brunswick's operations, from whom I also expect good things. If all these things turn out, as there is good reason to believe they will, we may once, in our turn, dictate a reasonable peace to France, who now pays seventy per cent. insurance upon its trade, and seven per cent. for all the money raised for the service of the year.

Comte Bothmar has got the small pox, and of a bad kind. Kniphausen diverts himself much here; he sees all places and all people, and is ubiquity itself. Mitchel, who was much threatened, stays at last at Berlin, at the earnest request of the King of Prussia. Lady * * is safely delivered of a son, to the great joy of that noble family. The expression of a woman's having brought her husband a son, seems to be a proper and cautious one; for it is never said, from whence.

I was going to ask you how you passed your time now at Hamburgh, since it is no longer the seat of strangers and of business; but I will not, because I know it is to no purpose. You have sworn not to tell me.

Sir William Stanhope told me, that you promifed to fend him some Old Hock from Hamburgh, and so you did—not. If you meet with any superlatively good, and not else, pray send over a fourre of it,

and

1

0 п

b fi

T

fo

tl

P

Ci

T

g

b

and write to him. I shall have a share in it. But unless you find some, either at Hamburgh or at Bremen, uncommonly and almost miraculously good, do not send any. Dixi. Yours.

LETTER CCCXXXV.

Blackheath, June the 13th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

THE secret is out; St. Malo is the devoted place. Our troops began to land at the Bay of Cancale the 5th, without any opposition. We have no farther accounts yet, but expect some every moment. By the plan of it, which I have seen, it is by no means a weak place; and I fear there will be many hats to be disposed of, before it is taken. There are in the port above thirty privateers; about sixteen of their own, and about as many taken from us.

ñ

of.

ty

y3

ng

he

uf-

e;

me

eat

ufe

to ifed

do

vely

f it,

and

Now for Africa, where we have had great success. The French have been driven out of all their forts and settlements upon the Gum-coast, and upon the river Senegal. They had been many years in possession of them, and by them annoyed our African trade exceedingly; which, by the way, toute proportion gardeé, is the most lucrative trade we have. The present booty is likewise very considerable, in gold dust, and gum senega; which is a very valuable, by being a very necessary commodity for all our stained and printed linens.

Now for America. The least fanguine people here expect, the latter end of this month or the beginning beginning of the next, to have the account of the taking of Cape Breton, and of all the forts with hard names in North America.

Captain Clive has long fince fettled Asia to our satisfaction; so that three parts of the world look very favourable for us. Europe, I submit to the care of the King of Prussia, and Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick; and I think they will give a good account of it. France is out of luck, and out of courage; and will, I hope, be enough out of spirits to submit to a reasonable peace. By reasonable, I mean what all people call reasonable in their own case; an advantageous one for us.

I have fet all right with Münchausen; who would not own that he was at all offended, and said, as you do, that his daughter did not stay long enough, nor appear enough at Hamburgh, for you possibly to know that she was there. But people are always ashamed to own the little weaknesses of self-love, which, however, all people feel more or less. The excuse, I saw, pleased.

li

b

CI

B

th

W

fr

go

pr

23

m

th

be

to

bu

re

I will fend you your quadrille-tables by the first opportunity, configned to the care of Mr. Mathias here. Felices faustaque sint! May you win upon them, when you play with men; and when you play with women, either win, or know why you lose.

Miss — marries Mr. —, next week. Who proffers Love, proffers Death, says Waller to a dwarf: in my opinion, the conclusion must instantly choak the little Lady. Admiral * marries Lady * • •; there the danger, if danger is, will be on the other side. The Lady has wanted a man so long, that she now compounds for half a one. Half a ç-

rd ur

ok

he nd od of its, I

WD

old

23 gh,

bly

275 ve,

'he 6rf da win-

hen

why

rof-

arf:

oak

...

ther

ong.

that

I have been worse since my last letter; but am now, I think, recovering; tant va la crûche à l'eau;

and I have been there very often.

Good night. I am faithfully and truly yours.

LETTER CCCXXXVI.

Blackheath, June the 27th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

[70U either have received already, or will very soon receive, a little case from Amsterdam, directed to you at Hamburgh. It is for Princess Amelia, the King of Prussia's fifter, and contains some books, which she defired Sir Charles Hotham to procure her from England, fo long ago as when he was at Berlin: he fent for them immediately; but, by I do not know what puzzle, they were recommended to the care of Mr. Selwyn, at Paris, who took such care of them, that he kept them near three years in his warehouse, and has at last sent them to Amsterdam, from whence they are fent to you. If the books are good for any thing, they must be considerably improved, by having seen so much of the world; but, as I believe they are English books, perhaps they may, like English travellers, have seen nobody, but the feveral bankers to whom they were configned; be that as it will, I think you had best deliver them to Monsieur Hecht, the Prussian Minister at Hamburgh, to forward to her Royal Highness, with a respectful compliment from you, which you will, no doubt.

doubt, turn in the best manner; and, felon le bon ton de la parfaitement bonne compagnie.

You have already feen, in the papers, all the particulars of our St. Malo's expedition, fo I fay no more of that; only that Mr. Pitt's friends exult in the de-Aruction of three French thips of war, and one hondred and thirty privateers and trading thips; and affirm, that it flopped the march of threescore thoufand men, who were going to join the Comte de Clermont's army. On the other hand, Mr. Fox and Company call it breaking windows with guineas; and apply the fable of the Mountain and the Mouse. The next object of our fleet was to be the bombarding of Granville, which is the great entrepot of their Newfoundland fishery, and will be a considerable loss to them in that branch of their trade. Thefe, you will perhaps fay, are no great matters, and I fay fo too; but, at least, they are signs of life, which we had not given for many years before; and will show the French, by our invading them, that we do not fear their invading us. Were those invasions, in fishing-boats from Dunkirk, so terrible as they were artfully represented to be, the French would have had an opportunity of executing them while our fleet, and such a considerable part of our army, were employed upon their coal. But my Lord Ligonier does not want an army at bome.

The Parliament is prorogued by a most gracious speech neither by nor from his Majesty, who was to ill to go to the House; the Lords and Gentlemen are, consequently, most of them, gone to their several counties, to do (to be sure) all the good that is recommended to them in the speech. London, I am told, is now very empty, for I cannot say so from knowledge.

gre hea this

in a

for

I we the ago which have glo dal be you the fan pre tim

Yo

LCA

an

we exp

mo

foo

ton

ti-

ore

le-

n-

nd

ou-

er-

mind

he

of

W-

s to vill

; 00

not

ch,

ing

un-

to

ex-

ble

aft.

ous

200

are,

eral

onold, ow-

.

ledge. I vegetate wholly here. I walk and read a great deal, ride and scribble a little, according as my head allows, or my spirits prompt; to write any thing tolerable, the mind must be in a natural, proper disposition; provocatives, in that case, as well as in another, will only produce miserable, abortive performances.

Now you have (as I suppose) full leisure enough, I wish you would give yourself the trouble, or rather the pleasure, to do what I hinted to you some time ago; that is, to write short memoirs of those affairs which have either gone through your hands, or that have come to your certain knowledge, from the inglorious battle of Hastenbeck, to the still more scandalous treaty of neutrality. Connect, at leaft, if it be by ever so short notes, the pieces and letters which you must necessarily have in your hands, and throw in the authentic anecdotes that you have probably heard You will be glad when you have done it: and the reviving past ideas in some order and method will be an infinite comfort to you hereafter. I have a thoufand times regretted not having done fo: it is at present too late for me to begin; this is the right time for you, and your life is likely to be a busy one. Would young men avail themselves of the advice and experience of their old friends, they would find the utility in their youth, and the comfort of it in their more advanced age; but they feldom confider that, and you, less than any body I ever knew. May you foon grow wifer! Adieu.

LETTER CCCXXXVII.

Blackheath, June the 30th, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND,

HIS letter follows my last very close; but I received yours of the 15th in the short interval-You did very well not to buy any Rhenish, at the exorbitant price you mention, without farther directions; for both my brother and I think the money better than the wine, be the wine ever so good. We will content ourselves with our stock in hand of hum. ble Rhenish, of about three shillings a bottle. However pour la rareté du fait, I will lay out twelve ducats, for twelve bottles of the wine of 1665, by way of an eventual cordial, if you can obtain a fenatur consultum for it. I am in no hurry for it, so fend it me only when you can conveniently; well packed up s'entend.

You will, I dare fay, have leave to go to Cassel; and if you do go, you will perhaps think it reasonable, that I, who was the adviser of the journey, should pay the expence of it. I think so too, and therefore, if you go, I will remit the 1001, which you have calculated it at. You will find the House of Cassel the house of gladness; for Hanau is already, or must be foon, delivered of its French guefts.

The Prince of Brunswick's victory is, by all the Rilful, thought a chef d'auvre, worthy of Turenne, Condé, or the most illustrious human butchers. The French behaved better than at Rosbach, especially the Carabiniers Roiaux, who could not be entames. I with the fiege of Olmutz well over, and a victory after alt

wh pro

Pr

an

tw

H

do

to

le

al

Se

T

fr

u

2

2

I

21 which I think there is no reason to doubt of, must procure us a good peace at the end of the year. The Prince of Prussia's death is no public missfortune; there was a jealousy and alienation between the King and him, which could never have been made up between the possession of the crown and the next heir to it. He will make something of his nephew, s'il est du bois dont on en fait. He is young enough to forgive, and to be forgiven the possession and the expectative, at least for some years.

758.

re-

val-

ex-

rec-

ney

We

um.

weduway

d it

ap

el :

ble.

pay

, if

cu-

the

be

the

ne,

[be ally

. I

ory

fter

Adieu! I am unwell, but affectionately yours.

LETTER CCCXXXVIII.

Blackheath, July the 18th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Y ESTERDAY I received your letter of the 4th; and my last will have informed you that I had received your former, concerning the Rhenish, about which I gave you instructions. If vinum Mofellanum est omni tempore sanum, as the Chapter of Treves asserts, what must this vinum Rhenanum be, from its superior strength and age? It must be the universal panacea.

Captain Howe is to fail forthwith somewhere or another, with about 8000 land sorces on board him; and what is much more, Edward the White Prince. It is yet a secret where they are going; but I think it is no secret, that what 16,000 men and a great seet could not do, will not be done by 8000 men, and a much smaller seet. About 8500 horse, foot, and dragoons,

this

ante

to 1

righ

and laco

N

retu

ter

der

via,

ed 1

wat

70 ans, all I

Kin abo

only

qto

B

Y

dragoons, are embarking, as fast as they can, for Embden, to reinforce Prince Ferdinand's army : late and few, to be fure, but still better than never, and none. The operations in Moravia go on flowly, and Olmutz feems to be a tough piece of work: I own I begin to be in pain for the King of Prussia; for the Russians now march in earnest, and Maréchal Daun's army is certainly superior in number to his. God fend him a good delivery!

· You have a Danish army now in your neighbour. hood, and they fay a very fine one; I presume you will go to fee it, and, if you do, I would advise you to go when the Danish Monarch comes to review it himself; pour prendre Langue de ce Seigneur. The Rulers of the earth are all worth knowing; they fuggest moral reflections: and the respect that one naturally has for God's Vicegerents here on earth, is greatly increased by acquaintance with them.

Your card-tables are gone, and they enclose some fuits of clothes, and some of these clothes enclose a letter.

Your friend Lady * * is gone into the country with her Lord, to negotiate, coolly and at leifure, their intended separation. My Lady infifts upon my Lord's dismissing the * *, as ruinous to his fortune; my Lord infilts, in his turn, upon my Lady's dismissing Lord * *; my Lady replies, that that is unreasonable, fince Lord ** creates no expence to the family, but rather the contrary. My Lord confesses, that there is some weight in this argument; but then pleads sentiment: my Lady says, A fiddlestick for fentiment, after having been married fo long thu this matter will end, is in the womb of time, nam fuit ante Helenam.

for

ate

and

nd

WE

for hal

nis.

no.

imlers

geft

ally

atly

fe a vith

in-my ling

fon-

ily,

that

for

thu

You did very well to write a congratulatory letter to Prince Ferdinand; such attentions are always right, and always repaid in some way or other.

I am glad you have connected your negotiations and anecdotes; and, I hope, not with your usual laconism. Adieu! Yours.

LETTER CCCXXXIX.

Blackheath, August the 1st, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

I Think the Court of Cassel is more likely to make you a second visit at Hamburgh, than you are to return theirs at Cassel; and therefore, till that matter is clearer, I shall not mention it to Lord Holdernesse.

By the King of Prussia's disappointment in Moravia, by the approach of the Russians, and the intended march of Monsieur de Soubize to Hanover, the waters seem to me to be as much troubled as ever. Je vois très noir aduellement; I see swarms of Austrians, French, Imperialists, Swedes, and Russians, in all near sour hundred thousand men, surrounding the King of Prussia and Prince Ferdinand, who have about a third of that number. Hitherto they have only buzzed, but now I fear they will sting.

The immediate danger of this country is being drowned; for it has not ceased raining these three months,

142 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

months, and withal is extremely cold. This neither agrees with me in itself, nor in its consequences; for it hinders me from taking my necessary exercise, and makes me very unwell. As my head is always the part offending, and is so at present, I will not do like many writers, write without a head; so adieu.

LETTER CCCXL.

Blackheath, August the 29th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Your Secretary's last letter brought me the good news, that the fever had lest you, and I will believe that it has; but a postscript to it, of only two lines, under your own hand, would have convinced me more effectually of your recovery. An intermitting fever, in the intervals of the paroxysms, would surely have allowed you to have written a very few lines with your own hand, to tell me how you were; and till I receive a letter (as short as you please) from yourself, I shall doubt of the exact truth of any other accounts.

I send you no news, because I have none; Cape Breton, Cherbourg, &c. are now old stories; we expect a new one soon from Commodore Howe, but from whence we know not. From Germany we hope for good news; I confess I do not, I only wish it. The King of Prussia is marched to sight the Russians, and I believe will beat them, if they stand; but what then? What shall he do next, with the three hundred and sourscore thousand men, now actually at work

ppon

ye

y

I

Da

fe!

me

na

for

the

gra

the fibl

dick

Sulta

fold

her

for

ind

the ike

758.

200d

will only

CON

n infms.

very

y you

you

truth

Cape

ve ex-

, but hope ich it.

ffians,

t what pdred

work

opon

upon him? He will do all that man can do, but at last il faut succomber.

Remember to think yourself less well than you are, in order to be quite so: be very regular rather longer than you need; and then there will be no danger of a relapse. God bless you!

LETTER CCCXLI.

Blackheath, September the 5th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received, with great pleasure, your letter of the 22d August; for, by not having a line from you in your Secretary's two letters, I suspected that you were worse than he cared to tell me: and so far I was in the right, that your sever was more malignant than intermitting ones generally are; which seldom confine people to their bed, or at most only the days of the paroxysms. Now, thank God, you are well again, though weak, do not be in too much haste to be better and stronger; leave that to nature, which, at your age, will restore both your health and strength as soon as she should. Live cool for a time, and rather low, instead of taking what they call heartening things.

Your manner of making presents is noble, et sent la grandeur d'ame d'un preux Chevalier. You depreciate their value to prevent any returns; for it is impossible that a wine which has counted so many Sindicks, that can only be delivered by a senatus consultam, and is the panacea of the North, should be sold for a ducat a bottle. The sylphium of the Romans, which was flored up in the public magazines. and only distributed by order of the magistrate. I dare fay, cost more; fo that, I am convinced, your prefent is much more valuable than you would make it.

144 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Here I am interrupted, by receiving your letter of the 25th past. I am glad that you are able to undertake your journey to Bremen; the motion, the air, the new fcene, the every thing, will do you good, provided you manage yourfelf dif-

Your bill for fifty pounds shall certainly be accepted and paid; but as in conscience I think fifty pounds is too little, for feeing a live Landgrave, and especially at Bremen, which this whole nation know to be a very dear place, I shall, with your leave, add fifty more to it. By the way, when you fee the Princess Royal of Cassel, be sure to tell her how fensible you are of the favourable and too partial testimony, which you know she wrote of you to Princess Amelia.

The King of Prussia has had the victory, which you, in some measure, forecold; and as he has taken la Caiffe Militaire, I presume, Meffieurs les Ruffes font bors de combat pour cette campagne; for point d'argent, point de Suiffe, is not truer of the laudable Helvetit body, than point d'argent, point de Russe, is of the favages of the two Russias, not even excepting the Autocratrice of them both. Serbelloni, I believe, stands next in his Prussian Majesty's list to be beaten; that is, if he will stand; as the Prince de Soubize does in Prince Ferdinand's, upon the same condition. If both these things happen, which is by no means improbable, we may hope for a tolerable peace this winter;

WI

cal

tho

wa

gio

of

COL

the (w

POI

ſьo tan

me

for

mo 1

lies

ma cie

hist

Cal

forz

winter; for, an bout du compte, the King of Prussia cannot hold out another year; and therefore he should make the best of these favourable events, by way of negotiation.

I think I have written a great deal, with an actual giddiness of head upon me. So adieu.

Cs,

, 1

ore-

it.

tter

ble

no-

will dif-

aclifty

and

OWS

add

the how rtial

a to hich

ken

font

ent,

etic

the

the eve,

ten;

bize

ion.

eans

this

ter;

I am glad you have received my letter of the Ides of July.

LETTER CCCXLII.

Blackheath, September the 8th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

This letter shall be short, being only an explanatory note upon my last; for I am not learned enough, nor yet dull enough, to make my comment much longer than my text. I told you then, in my former letter, that with your leave, (which I will suppose granted) I would add fifty pounds to your draught for that sum; now lest you should misunderstand this, and wait for the remittance of that additional fifty from hence, know my meaning was, that you should likewise draw upon me for it when you please; which, I presume, will be more convenient to you.

Let the pedants, whose business it is to believe lies, or the poets, whose trade it is to invent them, match the King of Prussia with a hero, in ancient or modern story, if they can. He disgraces history, and makes one give some credit to romances. Calprenede's Juba does not now seem so absurd as formerly.

Vos. IV.

H

I have

146 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

I have been extremely ill this whole summer; but am now something better: however, I perceive, que Pesprit et le corps baissent; the former is the last thing that any body will tell me, or own when I tell it them; but I know it is true. Adieu.

ge

ar

hi

fu

is be

I in

Pr

the

ha

pr

H

Fr

an

is

the oth

I

bu

fay

de

vei

CVC

La

the flei

Ad

LETTER CCCXLIII.

Blackheath, September the 22d, 1758. MY DEAR FRIEND.

HAVE received no letter from you fince you left Hamburgh; I presume that you are perfectly recovered, but it might not have been improper to have told me so. I am very far from being recovered; on the contrary, I am worse and worse, weaker and weaker every day; for which reason I shall leave this place next Monday, and set out for Bath a sew days afterwards. I should not take all this trouble merely to prolong the sag-end of a life, from which I can expect no pleasure, and others no utility; but the cure, or at least the mitigation, of those physical ills which make that life a load while it does last, is worth any trouble and attention.

We are come off but scurvily from our second attempt upon St. Malo: it is our last for this season; and, in my mind, should be our last for ever, unless we were to send so great a sea and land some as to give us a moral certainty of taking some place of great importance, such as Brest, Rochesort, or Toulon.

Monsieur Münchausen embarked yesterday, as he said, for Prince Ferdinand's army; but as it is not generally

at 7110

ng

it

58.

left

aly

to to ver-

ker

cave

few

uble

hich

but

fical

A, is

d at-

fon ;

. un-

force

place

t, or

as he is not erally generally thought that his military fkill can be of any great use to that Prince, people conjecture, that his bufiness must be of a very different nature, and suspect separate negotiations, neutralities, and what not? Kniphausen does not relish it in the least, and is by no means fatisfied with the reasons that have been given him for it. Before he can arrive there. I reckon that something decisive will have passed in Saxony; if to the disadvantage of the King of Prussia, he is crushed: but if, on the contrary, he should get a compleat victory (and he does not get half victories) over the Austrians, the winter may probably produce him and us a reasonable peace. I look upon Russia as bors de combat for some time : France is certainly fick of the war; under an unambitious King, and an incapable Ministry, if there is one at all: and, unaffisted by those two Powers. the Empress Queen had better be quiet. Were any other man in the fituation of the King of Pruffia. I should not hesitate to pronounce him ruined: but he is such a prodigy of a man, that I will only fay, I fear he will be ruined. It is by this time decided.

Your Cassel Court at Bremen is, I doubt, not very splendid: money must be wanting; but, however, I dare say their table is always good, for the Landgrave is a Gourmand; and as you are domestic there, you may be so too, and recruit your loss of slesh from your sever: but do not recruit too sast. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXLIV.

London, September the 26th, 1758, MY DEAR FRIEND.

W

th

W.

for

th

YO

ze

411 fil

lo

ba

if

St

Ca

tia

of

ho

YO

me

åd

de

ho

wh

it

in

you

acc

õbl

Ma

MO

AM forry to find that you had a return of your fever; but, to fay the truth, you in some mea. fure deserved it, for not carrying Dr. Middleton's bark and prescription with you. I foresaw that you would think yourfelf cured too foon, and gave you warning of it; but by-gones are by-gones, as Chastres, when he was dying, faid of his fins : let us look forwards. You did very prudently to return to Hamburgh, to good bark, and, I hope, a good phy. fician. Make all fure there before you flir from thence, notwithstanding the requests or commands of all the Princesses in Europe; I mean a month at least, taking the bark even to supererogation, that is, some time longer than Dr. Middleton requires; for I presume you are got over your childishaels about taftes, and are sensible that your health deferves more attention than your palate. When you shall be thus re-established, I approve of your returning to Bremen: and indeed you cannot well avoid it, both with regard to your promise, and to the distinction with which you have been received by the Cassel family.

Now to the other part of your letter. Lord Holdernesse has been extremely civil to you, in sending you, all under his own hand, such obliging offers of his service. The hint is plain, that he will (in case you desire it) procure you leave to come home for some time; so that the single question is, Whether ea.

8

100

n's

Qu

OB

CS,

xok

by.

QE

nds

at

hat

CA;

acla

de

XQ4

TA

well

d to

bx

loh

nd-

ang

will ome

1 15,

ther

more

Whether you fould defire it or not, now. It will be two months before you can possibly undertake the journey, whether by fea or by land, and either way it would be a troublefome and dangerous one for a convalescent, in the rigour of the month of November; you could drink no mineral waters here in that feafon, nor are any mineral waters proper in your case, being all of them heating except Seltzer's; then, what would do you more harm than all medicines could do you good, would be the peffilential vapours of the House of Commons, in long and crowded days, of which there will probably be many this fession; where your attendance. if here, will necessarily be required. I compare Sr. Stephen's Chapel, upon those days, to la Grotta del Cane.

Whatever may be the fate of the war now, negotiations will certainly be flirring all the winter, and of those, the northern ones, you are sensible, are not the least important : in these, if at Hamburgh, you will probably have your mare, and perhaps a meritorious one. Upon the whole, therefore, I would advise you to write a very civil letter to Lord Holderneffe; and to tell him, that though you cannot hope to be of any use to his Majesty's affairs any where, yet, in the present unsettled fate of the North, it is possible that unforeseen accidents may throw it in your way to be of some little fervice, and that you would not willingly be out of the way of those accidents; but that you shall be most extremely obliged to his Lordship, if he will procure you his Majesty's gracious permission, to return for a few months in the fpring, when probably affairs will be more settled one way or another. When things tend nearer to a settlement, and Germany, from the want of money or men, or both, breathes peace more than war, I shall solicit Burrish's commission for you, which is one of the most agreeable ones in his Majesty's gift; and I shall by no means despair of success. Now I have given you my opinion upon this affair, which does not make a difference of above three months, or sour at most, I would not be understood to mean to force your own, if it should happen to be different from mine; but mine, I think, is more both for your health and your interest. However, do as you please; may you in this, and every thing else, do for the best! so God bless you!

H 3

ICO LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

LETTER CCCXLV.

Bath, October the 18th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received by the same post your two letters of the 29th past, and of the 3d instant. The last tells me, that you are perfectly recovered; and your resolution of going to Bremen in three or sour days proves it; for surely you would not undertake that journey a second time, and at this season of the year, without seeling your health solidly restored; however, in all events, I hope you have taken a provision of good bark with you. I think your attention to her Royal Highness may be of use to you here; and indeed all attentions, to all sorts of people, are always repaid in some way or other; though real fiel wr Po his wi an yo

is

th

to an fro of ter

WI

to Dr

tio

end

ant

ore

for

his

of

oon

ove

un-

ald

, I

eft.

and a!

58.

laft and four ake

the

ed ;

pro-

ten-

you

peongh real real obligations are not. For instance; Lord Titchfield, who has been with you at Hamburgh, has written an account to the Duke and Duchess of Portland, who are here, of the civilities you showed him; which he is much pleased, and they delighted with. At this rate, if you do not take care, you will get the unmanly reputation of a well-bred man; and your countryman, John Trott, will disown

you.

I have received, and tasted of your present; which is a tres grand win, but more cordial to the stomach than pleasant to the palate. I keep it as physic, only to take occasionally, in little disorders of my stomach; and in those cases I believe it is wholesomer than stronger cordials.

I have been now here a fortnight; and though I am rather better than when I came, I am still far from well. My head is giddier than becomes a head of my age; and my stomach has not recovered its retentive faculty. Leaning forwards, particularly to write, does not at present agree with Yours.

LETTER CCCXLVI.

Bath, October the 28th, 1758.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

YOUR letter has quieted my alarms; for I find by it, that you are as well recovered as you could be in fo short a time. It is your business now, to keep yourself well, by scrupulously following Dr. Middleton's directions. He seems to be a rational and knowing man. Soap and steel are, un-H 4 questionably, questionably, the proper medicines for your case, but as they are alteratives, you must take them for a very long time, fix months at least; and then drink chalybeate waters. I am fully persuaded, that this was your original complaint in Carniola; which those ignorant physicians called, in their jargon, Arthritis waga, and treated as such. But now the true cause of your illness is discovered, I flatter myself, that with time and patience on your part. you will be radically cured; but I repeat it again. it must be by a long and uninterrupted course of those alterative medicines above-mentioned. They have no tafte; but if they had a bad one, I will not now suppose you such a child, as to let the froward. ness of your palate interfere, in the least, with the recovery or enjoyment of health. The latter deferves the utmost attention of the most rational man; the former is only the proper object of the care of a dainty, frivolous woman.

The run of luck, which some time ago we were in, seems now to be turned against us. Oberg is completely routed; his Prussian Majesty was surprised, (which I am surprised at) and had rather the worst of it. I am in some pain for Prince Ferdinand; as I take it for granted, that the detachment from Maréchal de Contade's army, which enabled Prince Soubize to beat Oberg, will immediately return to the grand army, and then it will be infinitely superior. Nor do I see where Prince Ferdinand can take his winter quarters unless he retires to Hanover; and that I do not take to be at present the land of Canaan. Our second expedition to St. Malo, I cannot call so much an unlucky, as an ill-condusted

OF

M an

do

th

CI

A

13

P

fc

D

one; as was also Abercrombie's affair in America. Mais il n'y a pas de petite perte qui revient souvent; and all these accidents put together make a considerable sum total.

fe :

for ben

hat

rich

00,

the

tter

art,

ein,

of

hey not ud-

the de-

an:

of a cre

E S

or-

the

nd:

rom

nce

s to

pe-

ake

er t

4 of 20.

Red

ne:

I have found so little good by these waters, that I do not intend to stay here above a week longer; and then remove my crazy body to London, which is the most convenient place either to live or die in.

I cannot expect active health any where; you may, with common care and prudence, expect it every where; and God grant that you may have it! Adieu.

LETTER CCCXLVII.

London, November the 21st, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

YOU did well to think of Prince Ferdinand's riband, which I confess I did not; and I am glad to find you thinking so far beforehand. It would be a pretty commission, and I will accingere me to procure it you. The only competition I fear, is that of General Yorke, in case Prince Perdinand should pass any time with his brother at the Hague, which is not unlikely, since he cannot go to Brunswick to his eldest brother, upon account of their simulated quarrel.

I fear the piece is at an end with the King of Prussia, and he may say ilicer; I am sure he may perfonally say plaudite: Warm work is expected this session of Parliament, about continent and no continent: some think Mr. Pitt too continent, others too little

H 5

little so; but a little time, as the news-papers most prudently and truly observe, will clear up these matters.

ca

a .

ex

tu

w ar

G

hi

fo

de

b di

b fa a w F

0

4

y

The King has been ill; but his illness has terminated in a good fit of the gout, with which he is still confined. It was generally thought that he would have died, and for a very good reason; for the oldest Lion in the Tower, much about the King's age, died a fortnight ago. This extravagancy, I can assure you, was believed by many above peuple. So wild and capricious is the human mind!

Take care of your health, as much as you can; for, to be, or not to be, is a question of much less importance, in my mind, than to be or not to be well. Adieu.

LETTER CCCXLVIII.

London, December the 15th, 1758.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I T is a great while fince I heard from you, but I hope that good, not ill health, has been the occafion of this filence; I will suppose you have been, or are still at Bremen, and engrossed by your Hessian friends.

Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick is most certainly to have the Garter, and I think I have secured you the honour of putting it on. When I say secured, I mean it in the sense in which that word should always be understood at Courts, and that is insecurely; I have a promise, but that is not caution bourgeoise. In all events, do not mention it to any mortal, because of

efe

ni-

Aill uld

left

ied

ure

n:

efs

be

8.

t I

:2-

or

an

ily

OB

. I

ld

,;

fe.

eife

cause there is always a degree of ridicule that attends a disappointment, though often very unjustly, if the expectation was reasonably grounded : however, it is certainly most prudent not to communicate, prematurely, one's hopes or one's fears. I cannot tell you when Prince Ferdinand will have it; though there are fo many candidates for the other two vacant Garters, that I believe he will have his foon, and by himself ; the others must wait till a third, or rather a fourth vacancy. Lord Rockingham and Lord Holdernesse are secure ; Lord Temple pushes strongly. but, I believe, is not secure. This commission for dubbing a Knight, and so distinguished a one, will be a very agreeable and creditable one for you, et il. faut vous en acquitter galamment. In the days of ancient chivalry, people were very nice, whom they would be knighted by; and, if I do not mistake, Francis the First would only be knighted by the Chevalier Bayard, qui étoit preux Chevalter et sans reproche; and no doubt but it will be recorded, dans les archives de la Maison de Brunswick, that Prince Ferdinand received the honour of knighthood from your hands.

The estimates for the expences of the year 1759 are made up; I have seen them; and what do you think they amount to? No less than twelve millions three hundred thousand pounds: a most incredible sum, and yet already all subscribed, and even more offered! The unanimity in the House of Commons, in voting such a sum, and such forces, both by sea and land, is not less astonishing. This is Mr. Pitt's. doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

The King of Prussia has nothing more to do this H 6 year;

156 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTERS

wil

tio

car

Kr

wa

Or

Ik

ter

TI

no

fu

po

th.

hi

roj lit

M

M êtt

ple

w fte

in tic

year; and the next, he must begin where he has lefe off. I wish he would employ this winter in concluding a separate peace with the Elector of Saxony: which would give him more elbow-room, to act against France and the Queen of Hungary, and put an end at once to the proceedings of the Diet, and the army of the Empire; for then no estate of the Empire would be invaded by a co-Estate, and France, the faithful and difint refted guarantee of the Treaty of Westphalia, would have no pretence to continue its armies there. I should think that his Polish Majesty, and his Governor Comte Brühl. must be pretty weary of being fugitives in Poland, where they are hated, and of being ravaged in Saxony. This réverie of mine, I hope, will be tried, and I wish it may succeed. Good night, and God bless you!

LETTER CCCXLIX.

London, New Year's-day, 1759.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

MOLTI e felici, and I have done upon that fubject, one truth being fair, upon the mon lying day in the whole year.

I have now before me your last letter of the 21st December, which I am glad to find is a bill of health: but, however, do not presume too much upon it, but obey and honour your physician, " that thy days may be long in the land."

Since my last, I have heard nothing more concerning the riband; but I take it for granted it will will be disposed of soon. By the way, upon reflection, I am not sure that any body but a Knight ean, according to form, be employed to make a Knight. I remember that Sir Clement Cotterel was sent to Holland, to dubb the late Prince of Orange, only because he was a Knight himself; and I know that the proxies of Knights, who cannot attend their own installations, must always be Knights.
This did not occur to me before, and perhaps will not to the person who was to recommend you; I am sure I will not stir it; and I only mention it now, that you may be in all events prepared for the disappointment, if it should happen.

1 đ

đ

of

at 1,

d,

be

d

9

at

DE

1A

of

ch

at

n-

it

ill

G • • is exceedingly flattered with your account, that three thousand of his countrymen, all as little as himself, should be thought a sufficient guard upon three-and-twenty thousand of all the nations in Europe; not that he thinks himself, by any means, a little man, for when he would describe a tall hand-fome man, he raises himself up at least half an inch to represent him.

The private news from Hamburgh is, that his Majetty's Resident there is woundily in love with Madame ****; if this be true, God send him, rather than her, a good delivery. She must be strennée at this season, and therefore I think you should be so too; so draw upon me as soon as you please, for one hundred pounds.

Here is nothing new, except the unanimity with which the Parliament gives away a dozen of millions sherling; and the unanimity of the public is as great in approving of it; which has stifled the usual political and polemical argumentations.

Cardinal

158 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Cardinal Bernis's difgrace is as sudden, and hitherto as little understood, as his elevation was. I have seen his poems, printed at Paris, not by a friend, I dare say; and, to judge by them, I humbly conceive his Eminency is a p—y. I will say nothing of that excellent head-piece that made him, and unmade him in the same month, except O King, live for ever.

Good night to you, whomever you pass it with.

LETTER CCCL.

London, February the 2d, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

AM now (what I have very feldom been) two letters in your debt: the reason was, that my head, like many other heads, has frequently taken a wrong turn; in which case, writing is painful to me, and therefore cannot be very pleasant to my readers.

I wish you would (while you have so good an opportunity as you have at Hamburgh) make yourself perfectly master of that dull but very useful knowledge, the course of exchange, and the causes of its almost perpetual variations; the value and relation of different Coins, the Specie, the Banco, Usances, Agio, and a thousand other particulars. You may with ease learn, and you will be very glad when you have learned them; for, in your business, that fort of knowledge will often prove necessary.

I hear

th

be

W

ca

th

W

an of

for fel

th

wh

he iha

ha Te

Pa

wh

COR

to

wh

ha

for

hi-

I

m-fay

m,

ng,

59.

two

my

n a

to

my.

20

ake

ufe-

the va-

the

rti-

l be ove

hear

I hear nothing more of Prince Ferdinand's Garter: that he will have one is very certain; but when, I believe, is very uncertain; all the other postulants wanting to be dubbed at the same time, which cannot be, as there is not riband enough for them.

If the Russians move in time, and in earnest, there will be an end of our hopes and of our armies in Germany: three such mill-stones as Russia, France, and Austria, must, sooner or later, in the course of the year, grind his Prussian Majesty down to a mere Margrave of Brandenburgh. But I have always some hopes of a change under a Gunarchy; where whim and humour commonly prevail, reason very seldom, and then only by a lucky mistake.

I except the incomparable Fair-one of Hamburgh, that prodigy of beauty, and paragon of good-sense, who has enslaved your mind, and enstanded your heart. If she is as well étrennée as you say she shall, you will be soon out of her chains; for I have, by long experience, sound women to be like Telephus's spear, if one end kills, the other cures.

There never was so quiet, or so silent a session of Parliament as the present; Mr. Pitt declares only what he would have them do, and they do it nemine contradicente, Mr. Viner only excepted.

Dutchess Hamilton is to be married, to-morrow, to Colonel Campbell, the son of General Campbell, who will some day or other be Duke of Argyle, and have the estate. She resused the Duke of B—r sor him.

Derived from the Greek word rum, a woman, and means Female Government.

160 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Here is a report, but I believe a very groundless one, that your old acquaintance, the fair Madame C—e, is run away from her husband, with a jeweller, that etrennes her, and is come over here; but I dare say it is some mistake, or perhaps a lie. Adieu! God bless you!

M

and

fec

tho

all

tic oth bu

to thi

bu

Im

to qu

be

the

ÓIT

bo

be

CO

car

àn

bli

M

mi

gh

th

LETTER CCCLI.

London, February the 27th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

N your laft letter, of the 7th, you accuse me, most unjustly, of being in arrears in my correspondence; whereas, if our epistolary account were fairly liquidated, I believe you would be brought in confiderably debror. I do not fee how any of my letters to you can miscarry, unless von office-packet miscarries too, for I always fend them to the office. Moreover, I might have a juftifiable excuse for writing to you seldomer than usual, for to be fure there never was a period of time, in the middle of a winter, and the Parliament fitting, that supplied so little matter for a letter. Near twelve millions have been granted this year, not only nearly contradicente, but memine quicquid dicente. The proper officers bring in the estimates; it is taken for granted that they are necessary, and frugal; the Members go to dinner, and leave Mr. West and Mr. Martin to do the reft.

I presume you have seen the little poem of the Country Lass, by Soame Jenyns, for it was in the Chronicle; as was also an answer to it, from the Monitor.

-bau

Math a

ette :

lie.

me.

car-

UIII

be bow

vout

hem

able

for

the

that elve

mild.

-010

for

the

Mr.

the

the tor.

Monitor. They are neither of them bad performances; the first is the neatest, and the plan of the second has the most invention. I fend you none of those pieces volantes in my letters, because they are all printed in one or other of the news-papers, particularly the Chronicles; and I suppose that you and others have all those papers amongst you at Hamburgh; in which case it would be only putting you to the unnecessary expence of double postage.

I find you are fanguine about the King of Prussia this year: I allow his army will be what you say; but what will that be vis-à-vis French, Austrians, Imperialists, Swedes, and Russians, who must amount to more than double that number? Were the inequality less, I would allow for the King of Prussia's being so much ipse agmen as pretty nearly to balance the account. In war, numbers are generally my omens; and I confess, that in Germany they seem not happy ones this year. In America, I think, we are sure of success, and great success; but how we shall be able to strike a balance, as they call it, between good success there, and ill success upon the continent, so as to come at a peace, is more than I can discover.

Lady Chefterfield makes you her compliments, and thanks you for your offer; but declines troubling you, being discouraged by the ill success of Madame Münchausen's and Miss Chetwynd's commissions, the former for beef, and the latter for gloves; neither of which have yet been executed, to the distatisfaction of both. Adieu.

3

LETTER CCCLII.

London, March the 16th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

T HAVE now your letter of the 20th past lying before me, by which you despond, in my opinion too foon, of dubbing your Prince; for he most certainly will have the Garter; and he will as probably have it before the campaign opens, as after. His campaign must, I doubt, at best, be a defensive one: and he will show great skill in making it such; for, according to my calculation, his enemies will be at least double his number. Their troops, indeed, may perhaps be worse than his; but then their number will make up that defect, as it will enable them to undertake different operations at the same time. I cannot think that the King of Denmark will take : part in the present war; which he cannot do without great possible danger: and he is well paid by France for his neutrality; is fafe, let what will turn out; and, in the mean time, carries on his commerce with great advantage and security: so that that consideration will not retard your visit to your own country, whenever you have leave to return, and your own arrangemens will allow you. A short absence animates a tender passion, et l'on ne recule que pour mieux sauter, especially in the summer months; so that I would advise you to begin your journey in May, and continue your absence from the dear object of your vows till after the dog-days, when love is faid to be unwholesome.

who nico we got islan Spa you and lan

ver und

or wh en

In an Io

all pl

m ly

W

759.

be-

nion

cer-

His

ne:

for.

e at nay

bet

I

e z

ace it;

ith

ra-

y, tes

ld

D-

WS n-

e.

wholesome. We have been disappointed at Martinico; I wish we may not be so at Guadaloupe, though we are landed there; for many difficulties must be got over, before we can be in possession of the whole island. A propos de bottes ; you make use of two Spanish words, very properly, in your letter; were I you, I would learn the Spanish language, if there were a Spaniard at Hamburgh who could teach me; and then you would be master of all the European languages that are useful; and, in my mind, it is very convenient, if not necessary, for a public man to understand them all, and not to be obliged to have secourse to an interpreter, for those papers that chance or business may throw in his way. I learned Spanish when I was older than you; convinced, by experience, that, in every thing possible, it was better to trust to one's self, than to any other body whatsoever. Interpreters, as well as relators, are often unfaithful, and ftill oftener incorrect, puzzling, and blundering. In hort, let it be your maxim through life, to know all you can know, yourself; and never to trust implicitly to the informations of others. This rule has been of infinite service to me, in the course of my life.

I am rather better than I was; which I owe not to my physicians, but to an ass and a cow, who nourish me, between them, very plentifully and wholesomely; in the morning the ass is my nurse, at night the cow; and I have just now bought a milch-goat, which is to graze, and nurse me at Blackheath. I do not know what may come of this latter, and I am not without apprehensions that it may make a satyr of me; but, should I find that obscene disposition growing upon

upon me, I will check it in time, for fear of endangering my life and character by rapes. And so we heartily bid you farewell.

LETTER CCCLIII.

London, March the 30th, 1759.

MY DEAR FRIEND. DO not like these frequent, however short, returns of your illness; for I doubt they imply either went of skill in your physician, or want of care in his Rhubarb, foap, and chaly beate medicines and waters, are almost always specifics for obstructions of the liver; but then a very exact regimen is necessary, and that for a long continuance. Acids are good for you, but you do not love them; and fweet things are bad for you, and you do love them. There is another thing very bad for you, and I feet you love it too much. When I was in Holland, I had a flow fever, that hung upon me a great while; I consulted Boerhaave, who prescribed me what I suppose was proper, for it cured me; but he added, by way of postscript to his prescription, Venus rarius colatur: which I observed, and perhaps that made the medicines more effectual.

I doubt we shall be mutually disappointed in our hopes of seeing one another this spring, as I believe you will find, by a letter which you will receive, at the same time with this, from Lord Holdernesse; but as Lord Holdernesse will not tell you all, I will, between you and me, supply that desect. I must do him

the

the j

and

Kin

water P

" ha

" p

44 A

.. 0

er it

that fart

you

retu

and

YOU

the

OCC

Lo

tha thi

ref

an

for act

ing

wi

Sej

no

pr

20.

59.

irns

ther

his ines

uc-

n 13

cids

and

em.

Tear

a, 1

ile :

at I

led,

riùs

She

ted

ieve

at

but

Be-

him

the

the justice to fay, that he has acted in the most kind and friendly manner possible to us both. King read your letter, in which you defired leave to return, for the fake of drinking the Tunbridgewaters, he faid, "If he wants fleel waters, those of " Pyrmont are better than Tunbridge, and he can "have them very fresh at Hamburgh. I would ra-"ther he had asked to come last autumn, and had " passed the winter here; for if he returns now, I " shall have nobody in those quarters to inform me " of what passes; and yet it will be a very busy and "important scene." Lord Holdernesse, who found that it would not be liked, refolved to push it no farther; and replied, he was very fure, that when you knew his Majesty had the least objection to your return at this time, you would think of it no longer: and he owned that he (Lord Holdernesse) had given you encouragement for this application, last year, then thinking and hoping that there would be little occasion for your presence at Hamburgh this year. Lord Holdernesse will only tell you, in his letter, that, as he had fome reason to believe his moving this matter would be disagreeable to the King, he resolved, for your sake, not to mention it. You must answer his letter upon that foot singly, and thank him for this mark of his friendship; for he has really acted as your friend. I make no doubt of your having willing leave to return in autumn, for the whole winter. In the mean time, make the best of your Sejour where you are; drink the Pyrmont waters, and no wine but Rhenish, which, in your case, is the only proper one for you.

Next week, Mr. Harte will fend you his Gustavus Adolphus,

Adolphus, in two quartos; it will contain many new particulars of the life of that real hero, as he has had abundant and authentic materials, which have never yet appeared. It will, upon the whole, be a very curious and valuable history; though, between you and me, I could have wished that he had been more correct and elegant in his style. You will find it de. dicated to one of your acquaintance, who was forced to prune the luxuriant praises bestowed upon him. and yet has left enough of all conscience to satisfy a reasonable man. Harte has been very much out of order, these last three or four months, but is not the less intent upon sowing his Lucerne, of which he had fix crops last year, to his infinite joy, and, as he fays, profit. As a gardener, I shall probably have as much joy, though not quite fo much profit, by thirty or forty shillings; for there is the greatest promise of fruit this year, at Blackheath, that ever I faw in my Vertumnus and Pomona have been very prolife. pitious to me; as for Priapus, that tremendous garden God, as I no longer invoke him, I cannot expect his protection from the birds and thieves.

Adieu! I will conclude like a pedant, Levius fi patientia quicquid corrigere est nefas.

LETTER

1 five

dea

The

prif

arti

the

ed,

will unq

mar

forc

Prin

In i

Fran

are :

Han visib inter Y goat my r not l natu that

LETTER CCCLIV.

ew had ver

you

STOR

de-

rced

im,

fy a

at of t the

had fays,

nuch ty or

le of n my

pro-

gar-

t ex-

us fit

TER

London, April the 16th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

TTITH humble submission to you, I still say, that if Prince Ferdinand can make a defenfive campaign this year, he will have done a great deal, considering the great inequality of numbers. The little advantages of taking a regiment or two prisoners, or cutting another to pieces, are but trifling articles in the great account; they are only the pence, the pounds are yet to come; and I take it for granted, that neither the French, nor the Court of Vienna, will have le démenti of their main object, which is unquestionably Hanover; for that is the fumma summarum; and they will certainly take care to draw a force together for this purpose, too great for any that Prince Ferdinand has, or can have, to oppose them. In short, mark the end on't, j'en augure mal. France, Austria, the Empire, Russia, and Sweden, are not, at long run, too hard for the two Electors of Hanover and Brandenburgh, there must be some invisible Powers, some tutelar Deities, that miraculously interpole in favour of the latter.

You encourage me to accept all the powers that goats, affes, and bulls, can give me, by engaging for my not making an ill use of them; but I own, I cannot help distrusting myself a little, or rather human nature; for it is an old and very true observation, that there are misers of money, but none of power;

and

and the non-use of the one, and the abuse of the other, increase in proportion to their quantity.

I am very forry to tell you, that Harte's Guffavne Adolphus does not take at all, and consequently fells very little: it is certainly informing, and full of good matter; but it is as certain too, that the flyle is exe. crable: where the devil he picked it up, I cannot conceive, for it is a bad ftyle, of a new and fingular kind; it is full of Latinisms, Galicisms, Germanisms, and all isms but Anglicisms; in some places pon. pous, in others vulgar and low. Surely, before the end of the world, people, and you in particular, will discover, that the manner, in every thing, is at least as important as the matter; and that the latter never can please, without a good degree of elegancy in the former. This holds true in every thing in life: in writing, conversing, business, the help of the Grace is absolutely necessary; and whoever vainly think himself above them, will find he is mistaken, when it will be too late to court them, for they will not come to strangers of an advanced age. There is an History lately come out, of the Reign of Mary Queen of Scots, and her fon (no matter by whom) King James, written by one Robertson, a Scotchman, which for clearness, purity, and dignity of style, I will not scruple to compare with the best historians extent, not excepting Davila, Guicciardini, and perhaps Livy. Its fuccess has consequently been great, and a fecond edition is already published, and bought up. I take it for granted, that it is to be had, or at least borrowed, at Hamburgh, or I would fend it you.

I hope you drink the Pyrmont waters every moreing. The health of the mind depends so much upon the utr and with and have have extra in each apt in each app i 1 of contact of the con

Goo

groa

con

infte wint is no

the f

V

he

the vus

ells ood xe-

not

ms,

OM-

the

will leat

ever

the

: in 100 ink

hea

not

3 23

uces

Ling

nas,

will

tant

hape

and

v up.

lest

1.

the

the health of the body, that the latter deserves the utmost attention, independently of the senses. God send you a very great share of both! Adieu.

LETTER CCCLV.

London, April the 27th, 1759.

MY DEAR FRIEND. T Have received your two letters of the 10th and 13th, by the last mail; and I will begin my answer to them, by observing to you, that a wise man, without being a Stoic, confiders, in all misfortunes that befall him, their best as well as their worst side; and every thing has a better and a worse side. I have strictly observed that rule for many years, and have found by experience, that some comfort is to be extracted, under most moral ills, by considering them in every light, instead of dwelling, as people are too apt to do, upon the gloomy fide of the object. Thank God, the disappointment that you so pathetically groan under, is not a calamity which admits of no consolation. Let us simplify it, and see what it amounts to. You were pleased with the expectation of coming here next month, to fee those who would have been pleased with seeing you. That, from very natural causes, cannot be; and you must pass this fummer at Hamburgh, and next winter in England, instead of passing this summer in England, and next winter at Hamburgh. Now, estimating things fairly, is not the change rather to your advantage? Is not the fummer more eligible, both for health and pleafure, than the winter, in that northern frozen Zone? VOL. IV. and

170 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTERS

and will not the winter, in England, supply you with more pleasures than the summer, in an empty capital, could have done? So far then it appears, that you are rather a gainer by your missortune.

The tour too, which you propose making to Lubeck, Altena, &c. will both amuse and inform you; for, at your age, one cannot see too many different places and people; since at the age you are now of, I take it for granted, that you will not see them superficially, as you did when you first went abroad.

This whole matter then, fummed up, amounts to no more than this-that you will be here next winter. instead of this summer. Do not think that all I have faid is the confolation only of an old philosophical fellow, almost insensible of pleasure or pain, offered to a young fellow who has quick fensations of both, No, it is the rational philosophy taught me by experience and knowledge of the world, and which I have practifed above thirty years. I always made the best of the best, and never made bad worse, by fretting; this enabled me to go through the various scenes of life, in which I have been an actor, with more pleafure and less pain than most people. You will say, perhaps, One cannot change one's nature; and that if a person is born of a very sensible gloomy temper, and apt to fee things in the worst light, they cannot help it, nor new-make themselves. I will admit it, to a certain degree, and but to a certain degree; for though we cannot totally change our nature, we may in a great measure correct it, by reflection and philofophy; and fome philosophy is a very necessary companion in this world, where, even to the most formnate, the chances are greatly against happiness.

I am

ten

let

up

mo men

acc

1 fee

it a

for hea

fub

it h

post

have med

feve

your for i

the low

and

which

I am not old enough, nor tenacious enough, to pretend not to understand the main purport of your lak letter; and, to show you that I do, you may draw upon me for two hundred pounds, which, I hope, will more than clear you.

Good night: aquam memento rebus in arduis fervare mentem; be neither transported nor depressed by the accidents of life.

LETTER CCCLVI.

Blackheath, May the 16th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

VOUR Secretary's last letter of the 4th, which I I received yesterday, has quieted my fears a good deal, but has not intirely distipated them. Your fever fill continues, he says, though in a less degree. Is it a continued fever, or an intermitting one? If the former, no wonder that you are weak, and that your head achs. If the latter, why has not the bark, in substance and large doses, been administered? for, if it had, it must have stopped it by this time. post, I hope, will set me quite at ease. Surely you have not been fo regular as you ought, either in your medicines, or in your general regimen, otherwise this fever would not have returned; for the Doctor calls it your fever returned, as if you had an exclusive patent for it. You have now had illnesses enough, to know the value of health, and to make you implicitly follow the prescriptions of your physician in medicines, and the rules of your own common fense in diet; in which, I can affure you, from my own experience,

I 2

that

Iam

rith

tal,

you

ck.

for,

aces

ake

ater.

have hical

ered

oth.

xpe-

have beft

ing;

es of

plez-

I fay,

that mper,

annot ait it,

e; for e may philo-

com-

fortu-

172 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

that quantity is often worse than quality; and I would rather eat half a pound of bacon at a meal, than two pounds of any the most wholesome food.

I have been fettled here near a week, to my great fatisfaction, c'eft ma place, and I know it, which is not given to every body. Cut off from focial life by my deafness, as well as other physical ills, and being at best but the ghost of my former felf, I walk here in filence and folitude as becomes a ghost; with this only difference, that I walk by day, whereas, you know, to be fure, that other ghosts only appear by night. My health, however, is better than it was last year, thanks to my almost total milk diet. This enables me to vary my folitary amusements, and al. ternately to scribble as well as read, which I could not do last year. Thus I faunter away the remainder, be it more or less, of an agitated and active life, now reduced, (and I am not fure that I am a lofer by the change) to fo quiet and ferene a one, that it may properly be called, still life.

The French whisper in considence, in order that it may be the more known and the more credited, that they intend to invade us this year, in no less than three places; that is, England, Scotland, and Irland. Some of our great men, like the Devils, believe and tremble; others, and one little one, whom I know, laugh at it; and, in general, it seems to be but a poor instead of a formidable scarecrow. While same body was at the head of a moderate army, and wanted (I know why) to be at the head of a great one, intended invasions were made an article of political faith; and the belief of them was required, as in the Church the belief of some absurdities, and ever exco they the and may fogg well and, blefs

Frei

your just of very will write to be return count indefinder fretome.

fares

Th

even

even impossibilities, is required, upon pain of herefy, excommunication, and consequently damnation, if they tend to the power and interest of the Heads of the Church. But now there is a general toleration, and the best Subjects, as well as the best Christians, may believe what their reason and their consciences suggest. It is generally and rationally supposed, the French will threaten and not strike, since we are so well prepared, both by armies and sleets, to receive, and, I may add, to destroy them. Adieu! God bless you!

LETTER CCCLVII.

Blackheath, June the 15th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Your own hand; though it contains great, and I fear just complaints of your ill state of health. You do very well to change the air; and I hope that change will do well by you. I would therefore have you write, after the 20th of August, to Lord Holdernesse, to beg of him to obtain his Majesty's leave for you to return to England for two or three months, upon account of your health. Two or three months is an indefinite time, which may afterwards be insensibly stretched to what length one pleases; leave that to me. In the mean time you may be taking your measures with the best economy.

The day before yesterday, an express arrived from Guadaloupe;

d I

not my g at this was This

d al-

er, be w rey the

prohat it , that

than Ire-

to be

, and great

of po-

even

174 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTERS

Guadaloupe; which brought an account of our being in possession of the whole island. And I make no manner of doubt, but that, in about two months, we shall have as good news from Crown-point, Quebec, &c. Our affairs in Germany, I fear, will not be equally prosperous; for I have very little hopes for the King of Prussia or Prince Ferdinand. God bless you!

d

fo

fè

I

M

LETTER CCCLVIII.

Blackheath, June the 25th, 1759.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

THE two last mails have brought me no letter from you or your Secretary; I will take this silence as a sign that you are better; but however, if you thought that I cared to know, you should have cared to have written. Here the weather has been very fine for a fortnight together; a longer term than in this climate we are used to hold fine weather by. I hope it is so too at Hamburgh, or at least at the willa to which you are gone; but pray do not let it be your willa wiciosa, as those retirements are often called, and too often prove; though (by the way) the original name was villa wezzosa; and by wage miscalled wiciosa.

I have a most gloomy prospect of affairs in Germany; the French are already in possession of Cassel, and of the learned part of Hanover, that is, Gottingen; where I presume they will not stop pour l'amour des Belles Lettres, but rather go on to the Capital, and study them upon the coin. My old acquaintance, Monsieur Monfieur de Richelieu, made a great progress there in metallic learning and inscriptions. If Prince Ferdinand ventures a battle to prevent it, I dread the consequences; the odds are too great against him. The King of Prussia is still in a worse situation; for he has the Hydra to encounter: and though he may cut off a head or two, there will still be enough left to devour him at last. I have, as you know, long foretold the now approaching catastrophe; but I was Caffandra. Our affairs in the new world have a much more pleasing aspect; Guadaloupe is a great acquisition, and Quebec, which I make no doubt of, will ftill be a greater. But must all these advantages, purchased at the price of so much English blood and treasure, be at last facrificed as a peace-offering? God knows what confequences fuch a measure may produce; the germe of discontent is already great, upon the bare supposition of the case; but should it be realised, it will grow to a harvest of disaffection.

You are now, to be fure, taking the previous necessary measures for your return here in the autumn; and I think you may disband your whole family, excepting your fecretary, your butler, who takes care of your plate, wine, &c. one, or at most two, maidservants, and your valet de chambre, and one footman, whom you will bring over with you. But give no mortal, either there or here, reason to think that you are not to return to Hamburgh again. If you are asked about it, say, like Lockhart, that you are le serviteur des événemens ; for your present appointments will do you no hurt here, till you have some better destination. At that season of the year, I believe it will be better for you to come by fea than by land;

I 4

MORY and

t be for bles

be. e no

, we

bec.

759 etter this r, if

have been than r by. the let it often way)

wags

Geraffel, ttin-

ance,

feur

176 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTERS

fand; but that you will be best able to judge of from the then circumstances of your part of the world.

Your old friend Stevens is dead of the confumption that has long been undermining him. God bless you, and send you health!

LETTER CCCLIX.

Bath, February the 26th, 1761.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

I AM very glad to hear that your election is finally fettled, and, to fay the truth, not forry that Mr. * has been compelled to do, de mauvaise grace, that which he might have done at first in a friendly and handsome manner. However, take no notice of what is past, and live with him as you used to do before; for, in the intercourse of the world, it is often necessary to seem ignorant of what one knows, and to have forgotten what one remembers.

I have just now finished Coleman's play, and like it very well; it is well conducted and the characters are well preserved. I own, I expected from the author more dialogue wit; but, as I know that he is a most scrupulous classic, I believe he did not dare to put in half so much wit as he could have done, because Terence has not a single grain; and it would have been crimen less antiquitatis. God bless you!

LETTER

A day wha

the

and rea

tha

of

me

Ho

ite

Mi

the

her

" F

Sir

.

the

WI he

LETTER CCCLX.

Bath, November the 21st, 1761.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

e of mp.

blefa

61.

ally

hat

ace,

dly

of be-

ten

und

ke

ers

n-

12

to ·96

ld

R

I Have this moment received your letter of the 19th.

If I find any alterations by drinking these waters, now six days, it is rather for the better; but, in six days more, I think I shall find, with more certainty, what humour they are in with me; if kind, I will profit of, but not abuse their kindness; all things have their bounds, quos ultrà citràve nequit consistere rectum; and I will endeavour to nick that point.

The Queen's jointure is larger than, from fome reasons, I expected it would be, though not greater than the very last precedent authorized. The case of the late Lord Wilmington was *, I fancy, remembered.

I have

* Lord Wilmington, then Sir Spencer Compton, Speaker of the House of Commons, and who had long been treasurer and favourite of George the Second, when Prince of Wales. Upon the death of King George the First, he was in a manner declared Prime Minister; but a few days after the accession of George the Second to the throne, Queen Caroline asked Sir Spencer Compton, what dowry the should have, in case the had the misfortune to survive her Royal Confort. He replied; " As much as any Queen of "England ever had, which was, fifty thousand pounds the year." Sir Robert Walpole hearing of this, observed, that, " had her " Majefly, referred herself on that article to him, he should have " answered, One hundred thousand." This being reported to the Queen, the fent to Sir Robert, defiring to speak with him. When applying to herfelf an indelicate epithet, which he knew he had formerly applied to her, and had from thence conceived a diflike to him, the with great good-humour asked him the same question which she had before proposed to Sir Spencer Compton, which I have now good reason to believe, that Spain will declare war to us; that is, that it will very soon, is it has not already, avowedly assist France, in case the war continues. This will be a great triumph to Mr. Pitt, and fully justify his plan of beginning with Spain sirst, and having the sirst blow, which is often half the battle.

Here is a great deal of company, and what is commonly called good company, that is, great quality. I trouble them very little, except at the pump, where my business calls me; for, what is company to a deaf man, or a deaf man to company?

Lady Brown, whom I have seen, and who, by the way, has got the gout in her eye, inquired very teaderly after you. And so I elegantly rest, Yours till death.

LETTER CCCLXI.

Bath, December the 6th, 1761.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Have been in your debt fome time, which, you know, I am not very apt to be; but it was really for want of specie to pay. The present state which he answered agreeably to his former declaration. This, it is said, was one principal step, on which Sir Robert Walpole mounted to that senith of power he afterwards enjoyed; and which had otherwise been defigned by the King for Sir Speacer Compton; who was, however, soon after created Earl of Wilmington, Knight of the Garter, and appointed President of the Council.

Will

, if

the

Mr.

vith

ften

om.

ity.

nere

leaf

the

en-

61.

you

Was

late

is, it lpole and meer Wilf the

of

of my invention does not enable me to coin; and you would have had as little pleasure in reading, as I should have had in writing le coglionerie of this place; besides, that I am very little mingled in them. I do not know whether I shall be able to follow your advice, and cut a winner: for, at present, I have neither won nor lost a single shilling. I will play on this week only; and if I have a good run, I will carry it off with me; if a bad one, the loss can hardly amount to any thing considerable in seven days, for I hope to see you in town to-morrow sevennight.

I had a dismal letter from Harte, last week; he tells me that he is at nurse with a sister in Berkshire; that he has got a confirmed jaundice, besides twenty other distempers. The true cause of these complaints I take to be, the same that so greatly disordered, and had nearly destroyed the most august House of Austria, about one hundred and thirty years ago; I mean Gustavus Adolphus; who neither answered his expectations in point of profit, nor reputation, and that merely by his own fault, in not writing it in the vulgar tongue; for, as to sacts, I will maintain, that it is one of the best histories extant.

Au revoir, as Sir Fopling fays, and God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXII.

Bath, November the 2d, 1762.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Arrived here, as I proposed, last Sunday; but as ill as I seared I should be, when I saw you. Head, stomach, and limbs, all out of order.

I have yet seen nobody but Villettes, who is settled here for good, as it is called. What consequences has the Duke of Devonshire's resignation had? He has considerable connections, and relations; but whether any of them are resigned enough to sesign with him, is another matter. There will be, to be sure, as many, and as absurd reports, as there are in the law books; I do not desire to know either; but inform me of what sacts come to your knowledge, and of such reports only as you believe are grounded. And so God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXIII.

Bath, November the 13th, 1762.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Have received your letter, and believe that your Preliminaries are very near the mark; and, upon that supposition, I think we have made a tolerable good bargain with Spain; at least, full as good as I expected, and almost as good as I wished, though I do not believe that we have got all Florida; but if we have St. Augustin, as I suppose, that, by the figure

figu We Fra Can Mif upo very who fala com fala

wil

tion in the

Gi bar

off kir figure of pars pro toto, will be called all Florida. We have by no means made so good a bargain with France; for, in truth, what do we get by it, except Canada, with a very proper boundary of the river Missisppi? and that is all. As for the restrictions upon the French sishery in Newsoundland, they are very well per la predica, and for the Commissary whom we shall employ; for he will have a good salary from hence, to see that those restrictions are complied with; and the French will double that salary, that he may allow them all to be broken through. It is plain to me, that the French sishery will be exactly what it was before the war.

t

0

e

e

1

-

d

h

e

The three Leeward islands which the French yield to us, are not, all together, worth half so much as that of St. Lucia, which we give up to them. Senegal is not worth one quarter of Goree. The restrictions of the French, in the East Indies, are as abfurd and impracticable as those of Newfoundland; and you will live to fee the French trade to the East Indies, just as they did before the war. But after all I have faid, the articles are as good as I expected with France, when I confidered that no one fingle person, who carried on this negotiation on our parts, was ever concerned or consulted in any negotiation before. Upon the whole, then, the acquisition of Canada has cost us fourscore millions sterling. I am convinced we might have kept Guadaloupe, if our negotiators had known how to have gone about it.

His most Faithful Majesty of Portugal is the best off of any body in this transaction, for he saves his kingdom by it, and has not laid out one Moidore in defence defence of it. Spain, thank God, in some measure, paie les pets casses; sor, besides St. Augustin, Logwood, &c. it has lost at least sour millions sterling, in money, ships, &c.

U

h

la

tı

P

F

P

tr

li

di

it

U:

Z'

go ha

G

al

tr

th

m

Harte is here, who tells me he has been at this place these three years, excepting some sew excursions to his sister; he looks ill, and laments that he has frequent sits of the yellow jaundice. He complains of his not having heard from you these sour years; you should write to him. These waters have done me a great deal of good, though I drink but two thirds of a pint in the whole day, which is less than the soberest of my countrymen drink of claret at every meal.

I should naturally think, as you do, that this session will be a stormy one, that is, if Mr. Pitt takes an active part; but if he is pleased, as the Ministers say, there is no other Æolus to blow a storm. The Dukes of Cumberland, Newcastle, and Devonshire, have no better troops to attack with, than the militis; but Pitt alone is ipse agmen. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXIV.

Bath, November the 27th, 1762.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Received your letter this morning, and return you the ball à la volée. The King's speech is a very prudent one, and, as I suppose that the Addresses, in answer to it, were, as usual, in almost the same words; my Lord Mayor might very well call them innocent. As his Majesty expatiates so much upon

are,

ing,

this cur.

at he om-

four have

but lefs

laret

this akes

fters

The

hire,

itiz;

762.

turn

1 1

Ad-

upon queh queh

upon the great archievements of the war, I cannot help hoping that, when the Preliminaries shall be laid before Parliament in due time, which, I suppose, means after the respective ratifications of all the contracting parties, that some untalked-of and unexpected advantage will break out in our treaty with France; St. Lucia, at leaft. I fee, in the newspapers, an article which I by no means like, in our treaty with Spain; which is, that we shall be at liberty to cut logwood in the Bay of Campeachy, but paying for it. Who does not fee that this condition may, and probably will, amount to a prohibition, by the price which the Spaniards may fet it at? It was our undoubted right, and confirmed to us by former treaties, before the war, to cut logwood gratis; but this new stipulation (if true) gives us a privilege, fomething like a reprieve to a criminal, with a non obstante to be hanged.

I now drink so little water, that it can neither do me good nor hurt; but as I bathe but twice a week, that operation, which does my rheumatic carcase good, will keep me here some time longer than you had allowed.

Harte is going to publish a new edition of his Gustavus, in octavo; which, he tells me, he has altered, and which, I could tell him, he should translate into English, or it will not fell better than the former; for, while the world endures, style and manner will be regarded, at least as much as matter. And so, Dien vons ait dans sa saite garde!

LETTER CCCLXV.

th

21 fh

fe H

fo

for

ar H pla

in

ce

Bath, December the 4th, 1762.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

T Received your letter this morning, with the en-I closed Preliminaries, which we have had here thefe three days; and I return them, fince you intend to keep them, which is more than I believe the French will. I am very glad to find that the French are to restore all the conquests they made upon us in the East Indies during this war; and I cannot doubt but they will likewise restore to us all the Cod that they shall take within less than three leagues of our coasts in North America, (a distance easily measured, especially at sea) according to the spirit, though not the letter of the Treaty. I am informed, that the frong opposition to the Peace will be in the House of Lords, though I cannot well conceive it; nor can I make out above fix or feven, who will be against it upon a division, unless (which I cannot suppose) fome of the Bishops should vote on the side of their maker. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXVI.

Bath, December the 13th, 1762.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

YESTERDAY I received your letter, which gave me a very clear account of the debate in your House. It is impossible for a human creature to speak well for three hours and an half; I question the orator of the fallen Angels, ever spoke so long at a time.

There must have been a trick in Charles Townmend's speaking for the Preliminaries; for he is infinitely above having an opinion. Lord Egremont must be ill, or have thoughts of going into some other place; perhaps into Lord Granville's, who they say is dying: when he dies, the ablest head in England dies too, take it for all in all.

d

•

to ne

at

ey

ur

d,

he

an nft

(e) eir

62.

ich

in ure

ef-

100

I shall be in town, barring accidents, this day sevennight, by dinner-time; when I have ordered a Haricot, to which you will be very welcome, about sour o'clock. En attendant Dien wous ait dans sa sainte garde!

LETTER CCCLXVII.

Blackheath, June the 14th, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received, by the last mail, your letter of the 4th, from the Hague; so far so good. You arrived sonica at the Hague, for our Embassador's entertainment; I find he has been very civil to you. You are in the right to stop, for two or three days, at Hanau, and make your court to the Lady of that place. Your Excellency makes a figure already in the news-papers; and let them, and others, Excellency you as much as they please, but pray suffer not your own servants to do it.

Nothing

Her Royal Highness Princess Mary of England, Land-gravine of Hesse.

Nothing new of any kind has happened here fince you went; fo I will wish you a good night, and hope that God will bless you.

LETTER CCCLXVIII.

Blackheath, July the 14th, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Ratisbon, where I am glad that you are arrived safe. You are, I find, over head and ears engaged in ceremony and étiquette. You must not yield in any thing essential, where your public character may suffer; but I advise you, at the same time, to distinguish carefully what may and what may not affect it, and to despise some German minuties; such as one step lower or higher upon the stairs, a bow more or less, and such sort of trisles.

By what I see in Cressener's letter to you, the cheapness of wine compensates the quantity, as the cheapness of servants compensates the number that you must make use of.

Write to your mother often, if it be but three words, to prove your existence; for when she does not hear from you, she knows, to a demonstration, that you are dead, if not buried.

The enclosed is a letter of the utmost consequence, which I was defired to forward, with care and speed, to the most serene Louis.

My head is not well to-day. So God bless you!

ice pe

63.

om

are eus

not

ha-

me

hat

mj-

the

the

the

that aree

loes

ion,

nce,

eed,

n!

ER

LETTER CCCLXIX.

Blackheath, August the 1st, 1763. MY DEAR FRIEND,

T Hope that by this time you are pretty well fettled At Ratisbon, at least as to the important points of the ceremonial; fo that you may know to precifion, to whom you must give, and from whom you must require, the feine Excellentz. Those formalities are, no doubt, ridiculous enough in themselves; but yet they are necessary for manners, and sometimes for bufiness; and both would suffer by laying them quite afide.

I have lately had an attack of a new complaint, which I have long suspected that I had in my body. in allu primo, as the pedants call it, but which I never felt in allu fecundo, till last week, and that is a fit of the stone or gravel. It was, thank God, but a flight one; but it was dans toutes les formes; for it was preceded by a pain in my loins, which I at first took for fome remains of my rheumatism; but was foon convinced of my mistake, by making water much blacker than coffee, with a prodigious sediment of gravel. I am now perfectly easy again, and have no more indications of this dreadful complaint.

God keep you from that and deafness! other complaints are the common, and almost the inevitable lot of human nature, but admit of some mitigation.

God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXX.

Blackheath, August the 22d, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

7 OU will, by this post, hear from others, that Lord Egremont died two days ago of an apoplexy; which, from his figure, and the constant plethora he lived in, was reasonably to be expected. You will ask me, who is to be Secretary in his room? to which I answer, that I do not know. I should guess Lord Sandwich, to be succeeded in the Admiralty by Charles Townshend; unless the Duke of Bedford, who feems to have taken to himself the department of Europe, should have a mind to it. This event may perhaps produce others; but, till this happened, every thing was in a state of inaction, and absolutely nothing was done. Before the next fession, this chaos must necessarily take some form, either by a new jumble of its own atoms, or by mixing them with the more efficient ones of the Opposition.

I fee by the news-papers, as well as by your letter, that the difficulties still subsist about your ceremonial at Ratisbon; should they, from pride and folly, prove insuperable, and obstruct your real business, there is one expedient, which may perhaps remove difficulties, and which I have often known practised; but which I believe our people here know nothing of: it is, to have the character of Minister, only, in your oftensible title, and that of Envoy Extraordinary in your pocket, to produce occasionally, of in you diffi don:

fo (

hor wh lon tre

1

Monto who mo

for kn to an

ba

occasionally, especially if you should be sent to any of the Electors in your neighbourhood: or else, in any transactions that you may have, in which your title of Envoy Extraordinary may create great dissiculties, to have a reversal given you, declaring, that the temporary suspension of that character, ne donnera pas la moindre atteinte ni à wos droits ni à wos pretensions. As for the rest, divert yourself as well as you can, and eat and drink as little as you can: and so God bless you!

63.

hat

po-

ant

ed. m? uld

the

it.

till

on,

ext

m,

by

)per,

re-

nd

1

LPS

MA

ere

of

of

ly,

LETTER CCCLXXI.

Blackheath, September the 1st, 1763. MY DEAR FRIEND,

REAT news! The King fent for Mr. Pitt, I last Saturday, and the conference lasted a full hour: on the Monday following another conference, which lasted much longer; and yesterday a third, longer than either. You take for granted, that the treaty was concluded and ratified: no fuch matter, for this last conference broke it intirely off; and Mr. Pitt and Lord Temple went yesterday evening to their respective country houses. Would you know what it broke off upon, you must ask the newsmongers, and the coffee-houses; who, I dare say, know it all very minutely; but I, who am not apt to know any thing that I do not know, honeftly and humbly confess, that I cannot tell you; probably one party asked too much, and the other would grant too little. However, the King's dignity was not, in my mind, much consulted, by their making him sole Plenipotentiary of a treaty, which they were not, in all events, determined to conclude. It ought surely to have been begun by some inferior agent, and his Majesty should only have appeared in rejecting or ratifying it. Lewis the XIVth never sate down before a town in person, that was not sure to be taken.

CO

CO

no

cal

an

fire

no

cal

def

bu

the

en

for

and

fel

COI

WO

the

few

trii ma feli

day

it.

for var

hop

tia

However, ce qui est disseré n'est pas perdu; for this matter must be taken up again, and concluded before the meeting of the Parliament, and probably upon more disadvantageous terms to the present Ministers, who have tacitly admitted, by this late negotiation, what their enemies have loudly proclaimed, that they are not able to carry on affairs. So much de re politica.

I have at last done the best office that can be done, to most married people; that is, I have fixed the separation between my brother and his wife; and the definitive treaty of peace will be proclaimed in about a fortnight; for the only solid and lasting peace, between a man and his wife, is, doubtless, a separation. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXII.

Blackheath, September the 30th, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

You wished; for Lord Halifax, as senior, had of course ie.

ch

e.

10

in

te

to

e-oly

li-

10.

ed.

ich

ne,

ſe-

the

out

be-

.20

63.

TOM

t as

of

urfe

course his choice, and chose the southern, upon account of the colonies. The Ministry, such as it is, is now settled en attendant mieux; but, in my opinion, cannot, as they are, meet the Parliament.

The only, and all the efficient people they have, are in the House of Lords: for since Mr. Pitt has sirmly engaged Charles Townshend to him, there is not a man of the Court side, in the House of Commons, who has either abilities or words enough to call a coach. Lord B * * * is certainly playing an dessure dessures, and I suspect that it is with Mr. Pitt; but what that dessures is, I do not know, though all the coffee-houses do most exactly.

The present inaction, I believe, gives you leisure enough for ennui, but it gives you time enough too for better things; I mean reading useful books; and, what is still more useful, conversing with yourfelf some part of every day. Lord Shaftesbury recommends felf-conversation to all authors; and I would recommend it to all men; they would be the better for it. Some people have not time, and fewer have inclination, to enter into that conversation; nay, very many dread it, and fly to the most trifling diffipations, in order to avoid it; but if a man would allot half an hour every night, for this felf-conversation; and recapitulate with himself whatever he has done, right or wrong, in the course of the day, he would be both the better and the wifer for it. My deafness gives me more than sufficient time for felf-conversation; and I have found great advantages from it. My brother and Lady Stanhope are at last finally parted. I was the negotiator between them; and had so much trouble in it. it, that I would much rather negotiate the most difficult point of the jus publicum Sacri Romani Imperii, with the whole Diet of Ratisbon, than negotiate any point with any woman. If my brother had had some of those self-conversations, which I recommend, he would not, I believe, at past sixty, with a crazy, battered constitution, and deaf into the bargain, have married a young girl, just turned of twenty, sull of health, and consequently of desires. But who takes warning by the sate of others? This, perhaps, proceeds from a negligence of self-conversation. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXIII.

Blackheath, October the 17th, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

HE last mail brought me your letter of the 2d instant, as the former had brought me that of the 25th past. I did suppose that you would be fent for over, for the first day of the fession; as I never knew a ftricter muster, and no furlows al-I am very forry for it, for the reasons you hint at; but, however, you did very prudently, in doing de bonne grace, what you could not help doing: and let that be your rule in every thing, for the reft of your life. Avoid disagreeable things as much as by dexterity you can; but when they are unavoids. ble, do them with feeming willingness and alacrity. Though this journey is ill-timed for you in many respects, yet, in point of finances, you will be a gainer by it upon the whole; for depend upon it, they will keep

kee I fu fom hen nion

of i

upo the to h he l

> his call you to t

I had ing, mad

ing mile ing of

rii,

LDV

me

he

at-272

16 ker

1010 bot

002

101

63.

the that ould

on;

you

, 10

ng:

reft

h 25

ida-

rity.

re-iner

will reep

keep you here till the very last day of the session; and I suppose you have sold your horses, and dismissed some of your servants. Though they seem to apprehend the first day of the session so much, in my opinion, their danger will be much greater in the course of it.

When you are at Paris, you will of course wait upon Lord Hertford, and desire him to present you to the King; at the same time make my compliments to him, and thank him for the very obliging message he lest at my house in town; and, tell him, that, had I received it in time from thence, I would have come to town on purpose to have returned it in person. If there are any new little books at Paris, pray bring them me. I have already Voltaire's Zélis dans le Bain, his Droit du Seigneur, and Olympie. Do not forget to call once at Madame Monconseil's, and as often as you please at Madame du Pin's. Au revoir.

LETTER CCCLXXIV.

Bath, November the 24th, 1763. MY DEAR FRIEND.

I Arrived here, as you suppose in your letter, last Sunday; but after the worst day's journey I ever had in my life: it snowed and froze that whole morning, and in the evening it rained and thawed, which made the roads so slippery, that I was six hours coming post from the Devizes, which is but eighteen miles from hence; so that, but for the name of coming post, I might as well have walked on foot. I Vol. IV.

have not yet quite got over my last violent attack, and am weak and slimsy.

u

P

2

P

K

1

de

da

fu

G

an

bl

th

wa

ha ve

int

ing

an

her hor

Ro

flig

and wil

not gre

ferv

fic,

find

I have now drank the waters but three days; so that, without a miracle, I cannot yet expect much alteration, and I do not in the least expect a miracle. If they proved les eaux de Jouvence to me, that would be a miracle indeed; but, as the late Pope Lambertini said, Frà noi, gli miracoli sono passati già un pezzo.

I have seen Harte, who inquired much after you: he is dejected and dispirited, and thinks himself much worse than he is, though he has really a tendency to the jaundice. I have yet seen nobody else, nor do I know who here is to be seen; for I have not yet exhibited myself to public view, except at the pump, which, at the time I go to it, is the most private place in Bath.

After all the fears and hopes, occasioned severally by the meeting of the Parliament, in my opinion, it will prove a very easy session. Mr. Wilkes is universally given up; and if the ministers themselves do not wantonly raise difficulties, I think they will meet with none. A majority of two hundred is a great anodyne. Adieu! God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXV.

Bath, December the 3d, 1763. MY DEAR FRIEND,

AST post brought me your letter of the 29th past. I suppose C T let off his speech upon the Princes's portion, chiefly to show that that he was of the Opposition: for otherwise, the point was not debatable, unless as to the quantum, against which something might be said; for the late Princess of Orange (who was the eldest daughter of a King) had no more, and her two sisters but half, if I am not mistaken.

It is a great mercy that Mr. Wilkes, the intrepid defender of our rights and liberties, is out of danger, and may live to fight and write again in support of them; and it is no less a mercy, that God hath raised up the Earl of S_____ to vindicate and promote true religion and morality. These two blessings will justly make an epocha in the annals of this country.

I have delivered your message to Harte, who waits with impatience for your letter. He is very happy now in having free access to all Lord Craven's papers, which, he says, give him great lights into the bellum tricennale; the old Lord Craven having been the professed and valorous knight-errant, and perhaps something more, to the Queen of Bohemia; at least, like Sir Peter Pride, he had the honour of spending great part of his estate in her Royal cause.

I am by no means right yet; I am very weak and flimfy still; but the Doctor assures me, that strength and spirits will return: if they do, lucro apponam, I will make the best of them; if they do not, I will not make their want still worse, by grieving and regretting them. I have lived long enough, and observed enough, to estimate most things at their intrinsic, and not their imaginary value; and at seventy, I find nothing much worth either desiring or fearing.

K 2

D ...

29th his how that ck,

fo

cle.

uld

er-

111

ou:

7 to

lo I ex-

mp,

rate

ally

ion,

s is em-

ink

un-

But these resections, which suit with seventy, would be greatly premature at two-and-thirty. So make the best of your time; enjoy the present hour, but memor ultimæ. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXVI.

Bath, December the 18th, 1763. MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Received your letter this morning, in which you reproach me with not having written to you this week. The reason was, that I did not know what to write. There is that sameness in my life here, that every day is still but as the first. I see very few people; and, in the literal sense of the word, I hear nothing.

Mr. L— and Mr. C— I hold to be two very ingenious men; and your image of the two men ruined, one by losing his law-suit, and the other by carrying it, is a very just one. To be sure they felt in themselves uncommon talents for business and speaking, which were to reimburse them.

Harte has a great poetical work to publish, before it be long; he has shown me some parts of it.
He had intitled it Emblems, but I persuaded him to alter that name for two reasons; the first was, because they were not emblems, but fables; the second was, that, if they had been emblems, Quarles had degraded and vilished that name to such a degree, that it is impossible to make use of it after him: so they are to be called Fables, though Moral Tales would,

wo ask fay das

wh hea

fire lik bel

nig

I hag mad lou

1 and to j

rect

San you

imp

would, in my mind, be the properest name. If you ask me what I think of those I have seen, I must say that funt plura bona, quadam mediocria, et quadam—

Your report of future changes, I cannot think is wholly groundless: for it still runs strongly in my head, that the mine we talked of will be sprung, at, or before, the end of the session.

I have got a little more strength, but not quite the strength of Hercules: so that I will not undertake, like him, fifty deflorations in one night; for I really believe that I could not compass them. So good night, and God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXVII.

Bath, December the 24th, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

I Confess I was a good deal surprised at your presfing me so strongly to influence parson Rosenhagen, when you well know the resolution I had made several years ago, and which I have scrupulously observed ever since, not to concern myself, directly or indirectly, in any party political contest whatsoever. Let Parties go to loggerheads, as much and as long as they please; I will neither endeavour to part them, nor take the part of either; for I know them all too well. But you say, that Lord Sandwich has been remarkably civil and kind to you. I am very glad of it, and he can by no means impute to you my obstinacy, folly, or philosophy;

K 3

call

to becond
had ree,
: fo

ales

uld,

pla

ke

but 63.

you

you

life ery d, I

in-

in-

cart in

ak-

be-

call it what you please: you may with great truth affure him, that you did all you could to obey his commands.

I am forry to find that you are out of order, but I hope it is only a cold; should it be any thing more, pray consult Dr. Maty, who did you so much good in your last illness, when the great medicinal Mattadores did you rather harm. I have sound a Monsseur Diasoirus here, Dr. Moisy, who has really done me a great deal of good; and I am sure I wanted it a great deal, when I came here first. I have recovered some strength, and a little more will give me as much as I can make use of.

Lady Brown, whom I faw yesterday, makes you many compliments; and I wish you a merry Christimas, and a good night. Adieu!

LETTER CCCLXXVIII

Bath, December the 31st, 1763.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

GREVENKOP wrote me word, by the last post, that you were laid up with the gout; but I much question it, that is, whether it is the gout or not. Your last illness, before you went abroad, was pronounced the gout, by the skilful, and proved at last a mere rheumatism. Take care that the same mistake is not made this year; and that, by giving you strong and hot medicines to throw out the gout, they do not instame the rheumatism, if it be one.

Mr. Wilkes has imitated fome of the great men of antiquity, by going into voluntary exile: it was his only

OT

fe

W

2

w

bu

th

to ful

yo

YO

to tho

and gre

the

onl

bef

kno

Ho

thin

only way of defeating both his creditors and his profecutors. Whatever his friends, if he has any, give out of his returning foon, I will answer for it, that it will be a long time before that foon comes.

I have been much out of order these sour days, of a violent cold; which I do not know how I got, and which obliged me to suspend drinking the waters: but it is now so much better, that I propose resuming them for this week, and paying my court to you in town on Monday or Tuesday sevenight; but this is sub specified source. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXIX.

Blackheath, July the 20th, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have this moment received your letter of the 3d, from Prague, but I never received that which you mention, from Ratisbon; this made me think you in such rapid motion, that I did not know where to take aim. I now suppose that you are arrived, though not yet settled, at Dresden; your audiences and formalities are, to be sure, over, and that is great ease of mind to you.

I have no political events to acquaint you with; the summer is not the season for them, they ripen only in winter; great ones are expected immediately before the meeting of Parliament, but that, you know, is always the language of sears and hopes. However, I rather believe that there will be something patched up between the ins and the outs.

K 4

The

you rift.

1 last yout; gout oad, oved fame ving gout, one.

only

th

his

out

ng

ich

nal

da

illy

nt-

ave

Ig

I a

wh

kn

II

Ex

fal

of

ho

fo

25 po

cu

M

to

The whole subject of conversation, at present, is the Death and Will of Lord Bath : he has left above twelve hundred thousand pounds in land and money: four hundred thousand pounds in cash, stocks, and mortgages; his own estate, in land, was improved to fifteen thousand pounds a year, and the Bradford estate, which he * *, is as much; both which, at only five-and-twenty years purchase, amount to eight hundred thousand pounds; and all this he has left to his brother General Pulteney, and in his own difposal, though he never loved him. The legacies he has left are trifling; for, in truth, he cared for nobody: the words give and bequeath were too shocking to him to repeat, and so he left all, in one word, to his brother. The Public, which was long the dupe of his fimulation and diffimulation, begins to explain upon him; and draws such a picture of him as I gave you long ago.

Your late Secretary has been with me three or four times; he wants fomething or another, and it feems all one to him what, whether civil or military; in plain English, he wants bread. He has knocked at the doors of some of the Ministers, but to no purpose. I wish with all my heart that I could help him: I told him fairly that I could not, but advised him to find fome channel to Lord B * * *, which, though a Scotchman, he told me he could not. He brought a packet of letters from the office to you, which I made him feal up; and I keep it for you, as I suppose it makes up the series of your Ratisbon letters.

As for me, I am just what I was when you left me, that is, nobody. Old-age steals upon me insensibly. I grow I grow weak and decrepit; but do not fuffer, and fo I am content.

Forbes brought me four books of yours, two of which were Bielefeldt's letters: in which, to my knowledge, there are many notorious lies.

Make my compliments to Comte Einsiedel, whom I love and honour much; and so good night to feine Excellentz.

Now our correspondence may be more regular, and I expect a letter from you every fortnight: I will be regular on my part: but write oftener to your mother, if it be but three lines.

LETTER CCCLXXX.

Blackheath, July the 27th, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

I Received, two days ago, your letter of the 11th from Dresden, where I am very glad that you are safely arrived at last. The prices of the necessaries of life are monstrous there; and I do not conceive how the poor natives subsist at all, after having been so long and so often plundered by their own as well as by other Sovereigns.

As for procuring you either the title or the appointments of Plenipotentiary, I could as foon procure them from the Turkish as from the English Ministry; and, in truth, I believe they have it not to give.

Now to come to your Civil List, if one may compare small things with great: I think I have found out a better refreshment for it than you propose; for

K 5

to-morrow

ind i a
it a
it a
it is I bon
me,

oly.

WOT

, is

ove

ey:

and

to ord

at ght

left

lif-

he

ing to ain

ave

our ems

in

at ofe.

blo

to-morrow I shall send to your cashier, Mr. Larpent, five hundred pounds at once, for your use, which, I presume, is better than by quarterly payments; and I am very apt to think, that, next Midsummer-day, he will have the same sum, and for the same use, consigned to him.

It is reported here, and I believe not without some foundation, that the Queen of Hungary has acceded to the Family Compact between France and Spain; if so, I am sure it behoves us to form in time a counter alliance, of at least equal strength; which I could easily point out, but which, I fear, is not thought of here.

The rage of marrying is very prevalent; so that there will be probably a great crop of cuckolds next winter, who are at present only cocus en berbe. It will contribute to population, and so far must be allowed to be a public benefit. Lord G—, Mr. B—, and Mr. D—, are, in this respect, very meritorious; for they have all married handsome women, without one shilling fortune. Lord — must indeed take some pains to arrive at that dignity; but I dare say he will bring it about, by the help of some young Scotch or Irish Officer. Good-night, and God bless you!

ıt,

nd 1y,

se,

me

led

n;

ter

blu

ght

hat

ext

vill

ved

and

us;

quo

ake

fay

ung

les

ER

LETTER CCCLXXXI.

Blackheath, September the 3d, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have received your letter of the 13th past. I see that your complete arrangement approaches, and you need not be in a hurry to give entertainments, since so few others do.

Comte Flemming is the man in the world the best calculated to retrieve the Saxon sinances, which have been all this century squandered and lavished with the most absurd profusion: he has certainly abilities, and, I believe, integrity; I dare answer for him, that the gentleness and flexibility of his temper will not prevail with him to yield to the importunities of craving and petulant applications. I see in him another Sully; and therefore I wish he were at the head of our finances.

France and Spain both insult us, and we take it too tamely: for this is, in my opinion, the time for us to talk high to them. France, I am persuaded, will not quarrel with us, till it has got a Navy at least equal to ours, which cannot be these three or four years, at soonest; and then indeed, I believe, we shall hear of something or other; therefore, this is the moment for us to speak loud, and we shall be feared, if we do not show that we fear.

Here is no domestic news of changes and chances in the political world; which, like oysters, are only in season in the R months, when the Parliament sits. I think there will be some then, but of what kind, God knows.

De

200

to

Bu

ren

ma

faf

rać

If

He

all

go

an

wi

If me

de

an

Dr

on giv

ha

int

I have received a book for you, and one for myfelf, from Harte. It is upon agriculture, and will furprise you, as, I confess, it did me. This work is not only in English, but good and elegant English; he has even scattered graces upon his subject; and,
in prose, has come very near Virgil's Georgics in verse. I have written to him, to congratulate his happy transformation. As soon as I can find an opportunity, I will send you your copy. You (though no Agricola) will read it with pleasure.

I know Mackenzie, whom you mention. C'est un delié; sed cave.

Make mine and Lady Chestersield's compliments to Comte et Comtesse Flemming; and so, Dieu vous ait en sa sainte garde!

LETTER CCCLXXXII.

Blackheath, September the 14th, 1764. MY DEAR FRIEND,

YESTERDAY I received your letter of the 30th past, by which I find that you had not then got mine, which I sent you the day after I had received your former: you have had no great loss of it; for, as I told you in my last, this inactive season of the year supplies no materials for a letter; the winter may, and probably will, produce an abundant crop, but of what grain, I neither know, guess, nor care. I take it for granted, that Lord B * * * furnagera encore, but by the assistance of what bladders or cork-waistcoats, God only knows. The death of poor Mr. Legge, the epileptic fits of the Duke of Devonshire.

Devonshire, for which he is gone to Aix-la-Chapelle, and the advanced age of the Duke of Newcastle, seem to facilitate an accommodation, if Mr. Pitt and Lord Bute are inclined to it.

You ask me what I think of the death of poor Iwan, and of the person who ordered it. You may remember that I often faid, she would murder or marry him, or probably both; she has chosen the fafest alternative; and has now completed her character of femme forte, above scruples and hesitation. If Machiavel were alive, she would probably be his Heroine, as Cefar Borgia was his Hero. Women are all so far Machiavelians, that they are never either good or bad by halves; their passions are too strong, and their reason too weak, to do any thing with moderation. She will, perhaps, meet, before it is long, with some Scythian as free from prejudices as herself. If there is one Oliver Cromwell in the three regiments of guards, he will probably, for the fake of his dear country, depose and murder her : for that is one and the same thing in Russia.

You seem now to be settled, and bien nippé at Dresden. Four sedentary sootmen, and one running one, font Equipage lestee. The German ones will give you, seine Excellentz; and the French ones, if you have any, Monseigneur.

My own health varies, as usual, but never deviates into good. God bless you, and send you better!

LETTER CCCLXXXIII.

Blackheath, October the 4th, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have now your last letter, of the 16th past, lying before me; and I gave your enclosed to Grevenkop, which has put him into a violent buffle to execute your commissions, as well and as cheap as possible. I refer him to his own letter. He tells you true, at to Comtesse Cosel's diamonds, which certainly nobody will buy here, unfight unfeen, as they call it; fo many minuties concurring, to encrease or lessen the value of a diamond. Your Cheshire cheefe, your Burton ale and beer, I charge myfelf with, and they shall be fent you as foon as possible. Upon this occasion I will give you a piece of advice, which by experience I know to be useful. In all commissions. whether from men or women, point de galanteris, bring them in your account, and be paid to the uttermost farthing; but if you would show them une galanterie, let your present be of something that is not in your commission, otherwise you will be the Commissionaire banal of all the women of Saxony. A propos; Who is your Comtesse de Cosel ? Is the daughter, or grand-daughter, of the famous Madame de Cosel, in King Augustus's time? Is she young or old, ugly or handsome?

I do not wonder that people are wonderfully surprised at our tameness and forbearance, with regard to France and Spain. Spain, indeed, has lately agreed to our cutting logwood, according to the treaty, and sent strict orders to their Governor to allow

in

d

th

4.

ng

n-

.57

25

OU

-15

hey

10

efe,

and

this

by ons.

erie,

the hem

that

the ony.

s the

ame

fur-

egard lately o the nor to allow

allow it; but you will observe too, that there is not one word of reparation for the losses we lately suftained there. But France is not even so tractable; it will pay but half the money due, upon a liquidated account, for the maintenance of their prisoners. Our request, to have Comte d'Estaing recalled and censured, they have absolutely rejected, though, by the laws of war, he might be hanged for having twice broke his parole. This does not do France honour; however, I think we shall be quiet, and that at the only time, perhaps this century, when we might, with fafety, be otherwise; but this is nothing new, nor the first time, by many, when national honour and interest have been sacrificed to private. It has always been fo: and one may fay, upon this occasion, what Horace fays upon another, Nam fuit ante Helenam.

I have feen les Contes de Guillaume Vadé, and like most of them so little, that I can hardly think them Voltaire's, but rather the scraps that have fallen from his table, and been worked up by inferior workmen, under his name. I have not seen the other book you mention, the Distionnaire Portatif. It is not yet come over.

I shall next week go to take my winter-quarters in London, the weather here being very cold and damp, and not proper for an old, shattered, and cold arcase, like mine. In November I will go to the Bath, to careen myself for the winter, and to shift the scene. Good night!

LETTER

LETTER CCCLXXXIV.

t

-

P

fu

ve

fu

yo

on

hi

ph

go

an

had

to fibl

way

London, October the 19th, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

TESTERDAY morning Mr. * * came to me. from Lord Halifax, to alk me whether I thought you would approve of vacating your feat in Parliament, during the remainder of it, upon a valuable confideration, meaning money. My answer was. that I really did know your disposition upon that fubject; but that I knew you would be very willing, in general, to accommodate them, as far as lay in your power. That your Election, to my knowledge. had cost you two thousand pounds; that this Parliament had not fate above half its time; and that, for my part, I approved of the measure well enough, provided you had an equitable equivalent. I take it for granted, that you will have a letter from -, by this post, to that effect, so that you must consider what you will do. What I advise, is this; give them a good deal of Galbanum in the first part of your letter. Le Galbanum ne coute rien; and then fay, that you are willing to do as they please; but that you hope an equitable confideration will be had to the two thousand pounds, which your feat cost you in the present Parliament, of which not above half the term is expired. Morever, that you take the liberty to remind them, that your being fent for frem Ratisbon, last session, when you were just settled there, put you to the expence of three or four hundred pounds, for which you were allowed nothing; and that, therefore, you hope they will not think one thousand thousand pounds too much, considering all these circumstances; but that, in all events, you will do whatever they desire. Upon the whole, I think this proposal advantageous to you, as you probably will not make use of your seat this Parliament; and surther, as it will secure you from another unpaid journey from Dresden, in case they meet, or fear to meet with difficulties in any ensuing session of the present Parliament. Whatever one must do, one should do de bonne grace. Dixi. God bless you!

4.

e,

in

u-

as, at g, in

e,

for

h, it

-,

der

em

et-

hat

uon.

the

in

the

li-

em

led un-

ng;

one

and

LETTER CCCLXXXV.

Bath, November the 10th, 1764.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

AM much concerned at the account you gave me of yourself, in your last letter. There is to be fure, at fuch a town as Dresden, at least some one very skilful physician; whom I hope you have confulted; and I would have you acquaint him with all your feveral attacks of this nature, from your great one at Laubach, to your late one at Dresden: tell him too, that, in your last illness in England, the physicians mistook your case, and treated it as the gout, till Maty came, who treated it as a rheumatism, and cured you. In my opinion, you have never had the gout, but always the rheumatism; which, to my knowledge, is as painful as the gout can posfibly be, and should be treated in a quite different way; that is, by cooling medicines and regimen, instead of those inflammatory cordials which they always always administer, where they suppose the gout, to keep it, as they say, out of the stomach.

woila

most tiatio

inftru

Flen

min

eife

with affu!

and

Sec

Par

. (

mig

pag

I have been here now just a week; but have hitherto drank so little of the water, that I can neither speak well nor ill of it. The number of people in this place is infinite; but very sew whom I know. Harte seems settled here for life. He is not well, that is certain; but not so ill neither as he thinks himself, or at least would be thought.

I long for your answer to my last letter, containing a certain proposal, which by this time, I suppose, has been made you, and which, in the main, I approve of your accepting.

God bless you, my dear friend, and send you better health! Adieu.

LETTER CCCLXXXVI.

Bath, February the 26th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

YOUR last letter, of the 5th, gave me as much pleasure as your former had given me uneasiness; and Larpent's acknowledgment of his negligence frees you from those suspicions, which I own I did entertain, and which I believe every one would, in the same concurrence of circumstances, have entertained. So much for that.

You may depend upon what I promised you, before Midsummer next, at farthest, and at least.

All I can say of the affair between you of the Corps Diplomatique, and the Saxon Ministers, is, que it, to have nei-

cople

now.

inks

aina

fup-

n, I bet-

656 ich

afi-

li-

wn

ld,

n-

2-

he

ut

la

woila bien du bruit pour une ommelette au lard. It will most certainly be soon made up; and in that negotiation show yourself as moderate and healing as your instructions from hence will allow, especially to Comte Flemming. The King of Prussia, I believe, has a mind to insult him personally, as an old enemy, or eise to quarrel with Saxony, that dares not quarrel with him; but some of the Corps Diplomatique here assure me, it is only a pretence to recall his Envoy, and to send, when matters shall be made up, a little Secretary there, à moins de fraix, as he does now to Paris and London.

Comte Brühl is much in fashion here; I like him mightily; he has very much le ton de la bonne compagnie. Poor Schrader died last Saturday, without the least pain or sickness. God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXXVII.

London, April the 22d, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

THE day before yesterday I received your letter of the 3d instant. I find that your important affair of the ceremonial is adjusted at last, as I foresaw it would be. Such minuties are often laid hold on as a pretence, for Powers who have a mind to quarrel; but are never tenaciously insisted upon, where there is neither interest nor inclination to break. Comte Flemming, though a hot, is a wise man; and I was sure, would not break both with England and Hanover, upon so trisling a point, especially cially during a minority. A propos of a minority; the King is to come to the house to-morrow, to recommend a bill to settle a Regency, in case of his demise while his successor is a minor. Upon the King's late illness, which was no trisling one, the whole nation cried out aloud for such a bill, for reasons which will readily occur to you, who know situations, persons, and characters here. I do not know the particulars of this intended bill; but I wish it may be copied exactly from that which was passed in the late King's time, when the present King was a minor. I am sure there cannot be a better.

You inquire about Monsieur de Guerchy's affair: and I will give you as fuccinct an account as I can. of fo extraordinary and perplexed a transaction; but without giving you my own opinion of it, by the common post. You know what passed at first between Mr. de Guerchy and Monsieur D'Eon, in which, both our Ministers, and Monsieur de Guerchy, from utter inexperience in bufiness, puzzled themselves into disagreeable difficulties. About three or four months ago, Monsieur du Vergy published in a brochure, a parcel of letters, from himself to the Duc de Choiseul; in which he positively asserts, that Monsieur de Guerchy prevailed with him (Vergy) to come over into England to affaffinate D'Eon; the words are, as well as I remember, que ce n'étoit pas pour se servir de sa Plume, mais de son Epée, qu'on le demandoit en Angleterre. This accusation of affaffination, you may imagine, shocked Monsieur de Guerchy, who complained bitterly to our Ministers; and they both puzzled on for some time, without doing any thing, because they did not

two of I had

Up

of i

wh

Th

fiet

act

Car

the

tw

ve

bos

ma

lit

ex

ev

an

to be

G

ba

not know what to do. At last du Vergy, about two months ago, applied himself to the Grand Jury of Middlesex, and made oath, that Mr. du Guerchy had hired him (du Vergy) to affassinate D'Eon. Upon this deposition, the Grand Jury found a bill of intended murder against Monsieur de Guerchy: which bill, however, never came to the Petty Jury. The King granted a noli profequi in favour of Monfieur de Guerchy; and the Attorney General is actually profecuting du Vergy. Whether the King can grant a noli prosegui in a criminal case, and whether le Droit des gens extends to criminal cases, are two points which employ our domestic politicians, and the whole Corps Diplomatique. Enfin, to use a very coarse and vulgar saying, il y'a de la merde au bout du bâton, quelque part.

I fee and hear these storms from shore, suave mari magno, &c. I enjoy my own security and tranquillity, together with better health than I had reason to expect at my age, and with my constitution: however, I feel a gradual decay, though a gentle one; and I think that I shall not tumble, but slide gently to the bottom of the hill of life. When that will be, I neither know nor care, for I am very weary.

God bless you!

e.

is

he

he

2-

u.

W

27

he

or.

1:

n,

at

he

e-

in

y,

n-

or

in

he

ts.

im

ite

180 lon aed to ne id

10

Mallet died, two days ago, of a diarrhœa, which he had carried with him to France, and brought back again hither.

LETTER CCCLXXXVIII.

Blackheath, July the 2d, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

1

C

P

y

m

0 fr

G

an

yo

ha

mo

be

me

an

tar

ma

for

Are

Have this moment received your letter of the 22d past; and I delayed answering your former, in daily, or rather hourly expectation of informing you of the birth of a new Ministry; but in vain; for, after a thousand conferences, all things remain still in the state which I described to you in my last. Lord S. has, I believe, given you a pretty true account of the present state of things; but my Lord is much mistaken, I am persuaded, when he says, that the King has thought proper to re-establish his old servants in the management of his affairs; for he shows them all the public dislike possible; and, at his levee, hardly fpeaks to any of them; but speaks by the hour to any body else. Conferences, in the mean time, go on, of which it is easy to guess the main subject, but impossible, for me at least, to know the particulars; but this I will venture to prophefy, that the whole will foon center in Mr. Pitt.

You feem not to know the character of the Queen: here it is—She is a good woman, a good wife, a tender mother; and an unmeddling Queen. The King loves her as a woman; but, I verily believe, has never yet spoken one word to her about business. I have now told you all that I know of these affairs; which, I believe, is as much as any body else knows, who is not in the secret. In the mean time, you easily guess, that surmises, conjectures, and reports, are infinite; and if, as they say, truth is but one, one million at least least of these reports must be false; for they differ exceedingly.

You have lost an honest servant, by the death of poor Louis; I would advise you to take a clever young Saxon in his room, of whose character you may get authentic testimonies; instead of sending for one to France, whose character you can only know from far.

20

in 10

or,

l in ord t of uch

the sin

all

rdly

any

on,

im-

but

will een:

ten-

King

rever

have hich,

ho IS

uels,

nite;

on at least

When I hear more, I will write more; till when, God bless you!

LETTER CCCLXXXIX.

Blackheath, July the 15th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Told you in my last, that you should hear from me again, as soon as I had any thing more to write; and now I have too much to write, therefore will refer you to the Gazette, and the office letters, for all that has been done; and advise you to suspend your opinion, as I do, about all that is to be done. Many more changes are talked of; but so idly, and variously, that I give credit to none of them. There has been pretty clean sweeping already; and I do not remember, in my time, to have seen so much at once, as an intire new Board of Treasury, and two new Secretaries of State, cum multis aliis, Sc.

Here is a new political arch almost built, but of materials of so different a nature, and without a keystone, that it does not, in my opinion, indicate either Arength or duration. It will certainly require repairs, and

and a key-stone, next winter; and that key-stone will, and must necessarily be Mr. Pitt. It is true, he might have been that key-stone now; and would have accepted it, but not without Lord Temple's consent; and Lord Temple positively refused. There was evidently some trick in this, but what, is past my conjecturing. Davus sum non Oedipus.

There is a manifest interregnum in the Treasury; for I do suppose that Lord Rockingham and Mr. Dowdeswell will not think proper to be very active. General Conway, who is your Secretary, has certainly parts at least equal to his business, to which I dare say he will apply. The same may be said, I believe, of the Duke of Graston; and indeed there is no magic requisite for the executive part of those employments. The ministerial part is another thing; they must scramble with their sellow-servants, for power and savour, as well as they can. Foreign affairs are not so much as mentioned, and, I verily believe, not thought of. But, surely, some counterbalance would be necessary to the Family Compact; and, if not soon contracted, will be too sate. God bless you!

LETTER CCCXC.

Blackheath, August the 17th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Y OU are now two letters in my debt; and I fear the gout has been the cause of your contracting that debt. When you are not able to write yourself, let your Secretary send me two or three lines, to acquaint me how you are.

You

ch

fat

wi

M

jui

cie

wi

wi

ins

an

If

of

aft

reg

tha

13,

e

e, ld

.

re

ny

y:

Ar.

ve.

aly

are

Te,

na-

oy-

bey

19W

are not

ould

765.

fear

Ring

felf,

20-

You

You have now feen, by the London Gazette, what changes have really been made at Court; but, at the fame time, I believe you have feen that there must be more, before a Ministry can be settled; what those will be, God knows. Were I to conjecture, I should say, that the whole will center, before it is long, in Mr. Pitt and Co, the present being an heterogeneous jumble of youth and caducity, which cannot be essigned.

Charles Townshend calls the present, a Lutestring Ministry; fit only for the summer. The next session will be not only a warm, but a violent one, as you will easily judge, if you look over the names of the ins and of the outs.

I feel this beginning of the autumn, which is already very cold: the leaves are withered, fall apace, and feem to intimate that I must follow them; which I shall do without reluctance, being extremely weary of this silly world. God bless you, both in it and after it!

LETTER CCCXCI.

Blackheath, August the 25th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Received but four days ago your letter of the 2d instant. I find by it that you are well, for you are in good spirits. Your notion of the new birth, or regeneration of the Ministry, is a very just one; and that they have not yet the true seal of the covenant, is, I dare say, very true; at least, it is not in the pos-Vol. IV.

fession of either of the Secretaries of State, who have only the King's feal; nor do I believe (whatever his Grace may imagine) that it is even in the possession of the Lord Privy Seal. I own I am loft, in confidering the present situation of affairs; different conjectures present themselves to my mind, but none that it can rest upon. The next session must necessarily clear up matters a good deal; for I believe it will be the warmest and most acrimonious one that has been known, fince that of the Excise. The late Ministry, the present Opposition, are determined to attack Lord B- publicly in Parliament, and reduce the late Opposition, the present Ministry, to protect him pub. licly, in consequence of their supposed treaty with him. En attendant mieux, the paper war is carried on with much fury and scurrility on all sides, to the great entertainment of such lazy and impartial people as myfelf. I do not know whether you have the Daily Advertiser and the Public Advertiser; in which all the political letters are inferted, and some very wellwritten ones on both fides; but I know that they amuse me, tant bien que mal, for an hour or two every morning. Lord T- is the supposed author of the pamphlet you mention; but I think it is above him. Perhaps his brother C- T-, who is by no means fatisfied with the present arrangement, may have affisted him privately. As to this latter, there was a good ridiculous paragraph in the news-papers, two or three days ago : We bear that the Right Honourable Mr. C- T- is indisposed, at his bouse in Oxfordshire, of a pain in bis side; but it is not said in which fide.

I do not find that the Duke of York has yet vifited you;

and V poli

pref

the thin

rilo

to b St. 1

I car

yo

W.

fh

in

Pr

Pri

of

Pru

trit

Ro

les

per fen

for

wit

you; if he should, it may be expensive, mais on trouvera moien. As for the Lady, if you should be very sharp set for some English slesh, she has it amply in her power to supply you, if she pleases. Pray tell me in your next, what you think of, and how you like Prince Henry of Prussia. God bless you!

LETTER CCCXCII.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

ive

his

of

ng

res

the een

ry,

ord

ate ab-

on reat

aily

all

rell-

they

very

him.

y no may here

pers,

fe in ud in ifited

you;

YOUR great character of Prince Henry, which I take to be a very just one, lowers the King of Prussia's a great deal; and probably that is the cause of their being so ill together. But the King of Prussia, with his good parts, should reslect upon that trite and true maxim, Qui invidet minor, or Mr. de la Rochesoucault's, Que l'envie est la plus basse de toutes les passions, puisqu'on avoue bien des crimes, mais que personne n'avoue l'envie. I thank God I never was sensible of that dark and vile passion, except that formerly I have sometimes envied a successful rival with a sine woman. But now that cause is ceased, and consequently the effects.

What shall I, or rather what can I tell you of the political world here? The late Ministers accuse the present with having done nothing; the present accuse the late ones with having done much worse than nothing. Their writers abuse one another most scurrisously, but sometimes with wit. I look upon this to be peloter en attendant partie, till battle begins in St. Stephen's Chapel. How that will end, I protest I cannot conjecture; any farther than this, that, if

Mr. Pitt does not come in to the affistance of the prefent Ministers, they will have much to do to stand their ground. C— T— will play booty; and whom else have they? Nobody but C—; who has only good-sense, but not the necessary talents nor experience, Ære ciere viros martemque accendere cantu. I never remember, in all my time, to have seen so problematical a state of affairs; and a man would be much puzzled which side to bet on.

Your guest, Miss C-, is another problem which I cannot folve. She no more wanted the waters of Carlsbadt, than you did. Is it to show the Duke of K ____, that he cannot live without her? A dangerous experiment! which may possibly convince him that he can. There is a trick, no doubt, in it; but what, I neither know nor care: you did very well to show her civilities, cela ne gate jamais rien. I will go to my waters, that is, the Bath waters, in three weeks or a month, more for the fake of bathing than of drinking. The hot bath always promotes my perspiration, which is fluggish, and supples my stiff rheumatic limbs. D'ailleurs, I am at present as well, and better than I could reasonably expect to be, anno septuagesimo primo. May you be so as long, y mas! God bless you!

th

fo

m bo

25

DO

Ja

on ni

no

ve

bu

cer

oth

the

phy pair am pre ginde he is Hou

LETTER CCCXCIII.

1

ı,

æ

h

of

of 7-

at

it,

WC

to ks

of pi-

eu-

nd

lep-

as!

ER

London, October the 25th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received your letter of the 10th fonica; for I fet out for Bath to-morrow morning. If the use of those waters does me no good, the shifting the scene for some time will at least amuse me a little; and at my age, and with my infirmities, il faut saire de tout beis stèche. Some variety is as necessary for the mind, as some medicines are for the body.

Here is a total stagnation of politics, which, I suppose, will continue till the Parliament fits to do bufiness, and that will not be till about the middle of January; for the meeting on the 17th December is only for the fake of some new writs. The late Ministers threaten the present ones; but the latter do not feem in the least afraid of the former, and for a very good reason, which is, that they have the distribution of the loaves and fishes. I believe it is very certain that Mr. Pitt will never come into this or any other Administration: he is absolutely a cripple all the year, and in violent pain at least half of it. Such physical ills are great checks to two of the strongest passions, to which human nature is liable, love and ambition. Though I cannot persuade myself that the present Ministry can be long-lived, I can as little imagine, who or what can succeed them, telle oft la disette de sujets Papables. The Duke of - swears, that he will have Lord - personally attacked in both Houses; but I do not see how, without endangering himself at the same time.

Miss C— is safely arrived here, and her Duke is fonder of her than ever. It was a dangerous experiment that she tried, in leaving him so long; but it seems she knew her man.

I pity you for the inundation of your good countrymen, which overwhelms you; je sçai ce qu'en vant l'aune. It is, besides, expensive; but, as I look upon the expence to be the least evil of the two, I will see if a New-year's gift will not make it up.

As I am now upon the wing, I will only add, God bless you!

LETTER CCCXCIV.

Bath, November the 28th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

I have now been here near a month, bathing and drinking the waters, for complaints much of the same kind as yours, I mean pains in my legs, hips, and arms; whether gouty or rheumatic, God knows; but, I believe, both, that fight without a decision in favour of either, and have absolutely reduced me to the miserable situation of the Sphynx's riddle, to walk upon three legs; that is, with the assistance of my stick, to walk, or rather hobble, very indisferently. I wish it were a declared gout, which is the distemper of a gentleman; whereas the rheumatism is the distemper of a hackney-coachman or chairman, who are obliged to be out in all weathers and at all hours.

I think

I

#1

tr

th

gl re

ha

fo

H

lo

ce

A

I a

to gif

Ch

e.

it

n-

mi

ak

. I

od

65.

oth.

and ame

and

but.

n fao the

walk By

ntly.

Aems the who

at all think

I think you will do very right to ask leave, and I dare fay you will easily get it, to go to the baths in Suabia; that is, supposing you have consulted some skilful physician, if such a one there be, either at Dresden or at Leipsic, about the nature of your distemper, and the nature of those baths; but, fuos quisque patimur manes. We have but a bad bargain. God knows, of this life, and patience is the only way not to make bad worfe. Mr. Pitt keeps his bed here, with a very real gout, and not a political one, as is often suspected.

Here has been a Congress of most of the ex Minifires. If they have raised a battery, as I suppose they have, it is a masked one, for nothing has transpired; only they confess, that they intend a most vigorous attack. D'ailleurs, there seems to be a total suspension of all business, till the meeting of the Parliament, and then Signa canant. I am very glad, that, at this time, you are out of it; and for reasons that I need not mention: you would certainly have been fent for over, and, as before, not paid for your journey.

Poor Harte is very ill, and condemned to the Hot-well at Bristol. He is a better poet than philosopher; for all this illness and melancholy proceeds originally from the ill success of his Gustavus Adolphus. He is grown extremely devout, which I am very glad of, because that is always a comfort to the afflicted.

I cannot present Mr. Larpent with my New-year's gift, till I come to town, which will be before Christmas at farthest; till when, God bless you! Adieu.

LETTER CCCXCV.

fe:

be

m

p

94

fo

London, December the 27th, 1765.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Arrived here from Bath last Monday, rather, but not much better than when I went thither. My rheumatic pains, in my legs and hips, plague me still; and I must never expect to be quite free from them.

You have, to be fure, had from the office an account of what the Parliament did, or rather did not do, the day of their meeting : and the same point will be the great object at their next meeting; I mean, the affair of our American Colonies, relatively to the late imposed Stamp-duty; which our colonists absolutely refuse to pay. The Administration are for fome indulgence and forbearance to those froward children of their mother country: the Opposition are for taking vigorous, as they call them, but I call them violent measures; not less than les dragonades; and to have the tax collected by the troops we have there. For my part, I never faw a froward child mended by whipping; and I would not have the mother country become a kepmother. Our trade to America brings in, communibus annis, two millions a year; and the Stamp-duty is estimated at but one hundred thousand pounds a year; which I would by no means bring into the flock of the Exchequer, at the loss, or even the rik of a million a year to the national flock.

I do not tell you of the Garter, given away yesterday, because the news-papers will; but I must observe, ferve, that the Prince of Brunswick's riband is a mark of great distinction to that family; which, I believe, is the first (except our own Royal family) that has ever had two blue ribands at a time; but it must be owned they deserve them.

65.

her.

her.

me

rom

ac-

not

Dint

; I

rely

co.

tra-

e to the call lefs

ever ad 1

ep-

uni-

luty ds a

the

rik

Aer-

ob-

:rvc,

One hears of nothing now, in town, but the separation of men and their wives. Will Finch, the ex-vice Chamberlain, Lord Warwick, and your friend Lord Bolingbroke. I wonder at none of them for parting; but I wonder at many for still living together; for in this country, it is certain, that marriage is not well understood.

I have this day fent Mr. Larpent two hundred pounds for your Christmas-box, of which I suppose he will inform you by this post. Make this Christmas as merry a one as you can; for pour le peu de bon tems qui nous reste, rien n'est si funeste qu'un noir chagrin. For the new years; God send you many, and happy ones! Adieu.

LETTER CCCXCVI.

London, February the 11th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

Received, two days ago, your letter of the 25th past; and your former, which you mention in it, but ten days ago; this may easily be accounted for from the badness of the weather, and consequently of the roads. I hardly remember so severe a winter; it has occasioned many illnesses here. I am sure it pinched my crazy carcase so much, that, about three weeks ago, I was obliged to be let blood twice in four days; which I found afterwards was very necessary, by the relief it gave to my head, and to the rheumatic pains in my limbs; and from the execrable kind of blood which I lost.

Perhaps you expect from me a particular account the present state of affairs here; but if you do. you will be disappointed; for no man living (and I fill less than any one) knows what it is; it varies not only daily, but hourly. Most people think, and I amongst the rest, that the date of the present Ministers is pretty near out; but how soon we are to have a new style, God knows. This, however, is certain, that the Ministers had a contested election in the House of Commons, and got it but by eleven votes; too small a majority to carry any thing: the next day they lost a question in the House of Lords, by three. The question in the House of Lords was, to enforce the execution of the Stamp-act in the Colonies wi et armis. What conclusions you will draw from these premises, I do not know; I protest I draw none; but only stare at the present undecypherable flate of affairs, which, in fifty years experience, I have never feen any thing like. The Stamp-act has proved a most pernicious measure; for, whether it is repealed or not, which is still very doubtful, it has given such terror to the Americans, that our trade with them will not be, for some years, what it used to be. Great numbers of our manufacturers at home will be turned a starving, for want of that employment, which our very profitable trade to America found them: and hunger is always the cause of tumults and fedition.

As

As you have escaped a fit of the gout in this severe cold weather, it is to be hoped you may be intirely free from it, till next winter at least.

four

ary,

atic d of unt

do, id I ies,
and

Mito

in ren

the

ds,

25,

he

ill

eft

y-

ehe

r, ry

8,

3,

C-

0

P. S. Lord —, having parted with his wife, now keeps another w—e, at a great expence. I fear he is totally undone.

LETTER CCCXCVII.

London, March the 17th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Y O U wrong me, in thinking me in your debt; for I never receive a letter of yours, but I answer it by the next post, or the next but one, at farthest: but I can easily conceive that my two last letters to you may have been drowned or frozen in their way; for portents, and prodigies of frost, snow, and inundations, have been so frequent this winter that they have almost lost their names.

You tell me that you are going to the baths of Baden; but that puzzles me a little, so I recommend this letter to the care of Mr. Larpent, to sorward to you; for Baden I take to be the general German word for baths, and the particular ones are distinguished by some epithet, as Weisbaden, Carlsbaden, &c. I hope they are not cold baths, which I have a very ill opinion of, in all arthritic or rheumatic cases; and your case I take to be a compound of both, but rather more of the latter.

gla

acco

ne

de

no

I

fi

You will probably wonder that I tell you nothing of public matters; upon which I shall be as secret as Hotspur's gentle Kate, who would not tell what she did not know; but what is fingular, nobody feems to know any more of them than I do. People gape, stare, conjecture, and refine. Changes of the Ministry, or in the Ministry, at least, are daily reported and foretold; but, of what kind, God only knows. It is also very doubtful whether Mr. Pitt will come into the Administration or not; the two present Secretaries are extremely desirous that he should; but the others think of the horse that called the man to its affistance. I will say nothing to you about American affairs, because I have not pens, ink, or paper enough to give you an intelligible account of them. They have been the subjects of warm and acrimonious debates, both in the Lords and Commons, and in all companies.

The repeal of the Stamp-act is at last carried through. I am glad of it, and gave my proxy for it; because I saw many more inconveniencies from the enforcing, than from the repealing it.

Colonel Browne was with me the other day, and affured me that he left you very well. He faid that he faw me at Spa, but I did not remember him; though I remember his two brothers, the Colonel and the ravisher, very well. Your Saxon Colonel has the brogue exceedingly. Present my respects to Count Flemming; I am very forry for the Countes's illness; she was a most well-bred woman.

You would hardly think that I gave a dinner to the Prince of Brunswick, your old acquaintance. I am glad it is over; but I could not avoid it. Il m'avoit accablé de politesses. God bless you!

LETTER CCCXCVIII.

Blackheath, June the 13th, 1766. MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Received, yesterday, your letter of the 30th past. I waited with impatience for it, not having received one from you of six weeks; nor your mother neither, who began to be very sure that you were dead, if not buried. You should write to her once a week, or at least once a fortnight; for women make no allowance for either business or laziness; whereas I can, by experience, make allowances for both: however, I wish you would generally write to me once a fortnight.

Last week I paid my Midsummer offering, of five hundred pounds, to Mr. Larpent, for your use, as I suppose he has informed you. I am punctual, you must allow.

What account shall I give you of ministerial affairs here? I protest I do not know: your own description of them is as exact a one as any I, who am upon the place, can give you. It is a total dislocation and dirangement; consequently a total inefficiency. When the Duke of Graston quitted the seals, he gave that very reason for it, in a speech in the House of Lords: he declared, that he had no objection to the persons or to the measures of the present Ministers; but that he thought they wanted strength and efficiency efficiency to carry on proper measures with success; and that be know but one man (meaning, as you will easily fuppose, Mr. Pitt) who could give them that frength and folidity; that under this person, be should be willing to ferve in any capacity, not only as a General Officer, but as a pioneer; and would take up a spade and a matter. When he quitted the feals, they were offered first to Lord Egmont, then to Lord Hardwicke; who both declined them, probably for the fame reasons that made the Duke of Grafton refign them : but, after their going a begging for some time, the Duke of - begged them, and has them faute de miens. Lord Mountstuart was never thought of for Vienna, where Lord Stormont returns in three months: the former is going to be married to one of the Mile Windfors, a great fortune. To tell you the speculations, the reasonings, and the conjectures, either of the uninformed, or even of the best-informed public, upon the present wonderful situation of affairs, would take up much more time and paper than either you or I can afford, though we have neither of us a great deal of business at present.

I am in as good health as I could reasonably expect, at my age, and with my shattered carcase; that is, from the waist upwards: but downwards it is not the same; for my limbs retain that stiffness and debility of my long rheumatism, I cannot walk half an hour at a time. As the autumn, and still more as the winter approaches, take care to keep yourself very warm, especially your legs and seet.

Lady Chestersield sends you her compliments, and triumphs in the success of her plaster. God bless you!

LETTER

la

V

0

by

to

CI

th

m

de

of

K

th

te

th

Pe

W

20

LETTER CCCXCIX.

fily

ling.

but tock.

A to both

that after

e of

ess.

nns.

the

Mils

ula-

er of

blic.

ould

you

reat

1 ex-

that

not

de-

lf an

re 21

very

and bleis

ER

Blackheath, July the 11th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

OU are a happy mortal, to have your time thus employed between the Great and the Fair; I hope you do the honours of your country to the latter. The Emperor, by your account, feems to be very well for an Emperor; who, by being above the other Monarchs in Europe, may justly be supposed to have had a proportionably worse education. I find, by your account of him, that he has been trained up to homicide, the only science in which Princes are ever instructed; and with good reason, as their greatness and glory fingly depend upon the numbers of their fellow-creatures, which their ambition exterminates. If a Sovereign should, by great accident, deviate into moderation, justice, and clemency, what a contemptible figure would he make in the catalogue of Princes! I have always owned a great regard for King Log. From the interview at Torgaw, between the two Monarchs, they will be either a great deal better or worse together; but I think rather the latter, for our namesake, Philip de Comines, observes, that he never knew any good come from Pabouchement des Rois. The King of Prussia will exert all his perspicacity, to analyse his Imperial Majesty; and I would bet upon the one head of his Black Eagle, against the two heads of the Austrian Eagle; though two heads are faid, proverbially, to be better than one. I wish I had the direction of both the Monarchs.

narchs, and they should, together with some of their Allies, take Lorraine and Alsace from France. You will call me l'Abbé de St. Pierre; but I only say what I wish; whereas he thought every thing that he wished practicable.

Now to come home. Here are great buffles at Court, and a great change of persons is certainly very near. You will ask me, perhaps, who is to be out, and who is to be in? To which I answer, I do not know. My conjecture is, that, be the new settle ment what it will, Mr. Pitt will be at the head of it. If he is, I presume qu'il aura mis de l'Eau dans son Vin par rapport à Mylord B—; when that shall come to be known, as known it certainly will soon be, he may bid adieu to his popularity. A Minister, as Minister, is very apt to be the object of public dislike; and a Favourite, as Favourite, still more so. If any event of this kind happens, which (if it happens at all) I conjecture will be some time next week, you shall hear farther from me.

I will follow your advice, and be as well as I can next winter, though I know I shall never be free from my slying rheumatic pains, as long as I live; but whether that will be many years or few is extremely indifferent to me: in either case, God bless you! the

ful

bla

wh

Pr

evi

is,

hi

fta

ho

the

lo

tai

Pi

lie

th

ca (walk of un ha ley ou fay

he

I

ut,

not

de

it

Via

to 127

er,

dı

ent

AI)

all.

111

ree

163.

EI.

efs

R

LETTER CCCC.

Blackheath, August the 1st, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

HE curtain was at last drawn up, the day before yesterday, and discovered the new actors, together with some of the old ones. I do not name them to you, because to-morrow's Gazette will do it full as well as I could. Mr. Pitt, who had carte blanche given him, named every one of them: but what would you think he named himself for? Lord Privy Seal; and (what will aftonish you, as it does every mortal here) Earl of Chatham. The joke here is, that he has had a fall up flairs, and has done himself so much hurt, that he will never be able to stand upon his legs again. Every body is puzzled how to account for this step; though it would not be the first time that great abilities have been duped by low cunning. But be it what it will, he is now certainly only Earl of Chatham; and no longer Mr. Pitt, in any respect whatever. Such an event, I believe, was never read nor heard of. To withdraw, in the fullness of his power, and in the utmost gratification of his ambition, from the House of Commons, (which procured him his power, and which could alone infure it to him) and to go into that Hospital of Incurables, the House of Lords, is a measure so unaccountable, that nothing but proof positive could have made me believe it: but true it is. Hans Stanley is to go Embassador to Russia; and my Nephew, Ellis, to Spain, decorated with the red riband. Lord Shelburne

Shelburne is your Secretary of State, which I suppose he has notified to you this post, by a circular letter. Charles Townshend has now the sole management of the House of Commons; but how long he will be content to be only Lord Chatham's vicegerent there, is a question which I will not pretend to decide. There is one very bad sign for Lord Chatham, in his new dignity; which is, that all his enemies, without exception, rejoice at it; and all his friends are stupisfied and dumb-sounded. If I mistake not much, he will in the course of a year enjoy persect otium cum dignitate. Enough of politics.

Is the fair, or at least the fat, Miss C with you still? It must be confest that she knows the arm of Courts; to be so received at Dresden, and so connived at in Leicester-fields.

There never was so wet a summer as this has been, in the memory of man; we have not had one single day, since March, without some rain; but most days a great deal. I hope that does not affect your health, as great cold does; for, with all these inundations, it has not been cold. God bless you!

LETTER CCCCI.

Blackheath, August the 14th, 1766. MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Received yesterday your letter of the 30th past; and find by it, that it crossed mine upon the road, where they had no time to take notice of one another.

The

T

of t

follo

I b mal

peo

que

2 P

futa

by

for pri

con

mi

ly 1

Co

ing his rei

T

00 is for ex

an Pi

**

**

**

"

The news-papers have informed you, before now. of the changes actually made; more will probably follow, but what, I am fure I cannot tell you; and I believe nobody can, not even those who are to make them: they will, I suppose, be occasional, as people behave themselves. The causes and consequences of Mr. Pitt's quarrel now appear in print, in a pamphlet published by Lord T - ; and in a refatation of it, not by Mr. Pitt himfelf, I believe, but by some friend of his, and under his sanction. The former is very scurrilous and scandalous, and betrays private conversation. My Lord says, that in his last conference, he thought he had as good a right to nominate the new Ministry as Mr. Pitt, and consequently named Lord G-, Lord L-, &c. for Cabinet Council employments; which Mr. Pitt not confenting to, Lord T- broke up the conference, and in his wrath went to Stowe; where I presume he may remain undisturbed a great while, fince Mr. Pitt will neither be willing, nor able to fend for him again. The pamphlet, on the part of Mr. Pitt, gives an account of his whole political life; and, in that respect, is tedious to those who were acquainted with it before; but, at the latter end, there is an article that expresses such supreme contempt of Lord T-, and in fo pretty a manner, that I suspect it to be Mr. Pitt's own : you shall judge yourself, for I here transcribe the article.—" But this I will be bold to say, " that had he (Lord T-) not fastened himself " into Mr. Pitt's train, and acquired thereby fuch an " interest in that great man, he might have crept out " of life with as little notice as he crept in; and " gone off with no other degree of credit, than that " of cular lage. g be erent

fup.

ham, mies,

e not ienda

with arts

days alth,

766.

paff;

The

" of adding a fingle unit to the bills of mortality."-I wish I could fend you all the pamphlets and half. fheets that fwarm here upon this occasion; but that is impossible; for every week would make a ship's cargo. It is certain that Mr. Pitt has, by his dignity of Earl, lost the greatest part of his popularity, especially in the City; and I believe the Opposition will be very strong, and perhaps prevail, next session, in the House of Commons; there being now nobody there, who can have the authority, and ascendant over them, that Pitt had.

People tell me here, as young Harvey told you at Dresden, that I look very well; but these are words of course, which every one fays to every body. So fee is true, that I am better than at my age, and with my broken constitution, I could have expected tobe God bless you!

LETTER CCCCII.

Blackheath, September the 12th, 1766. MY DEAR FRIEND.

Have this moment received your letter of the 27th past. I was in hopes that your course of waters this year at Baden, would have given you a longer reprieve from your painful complaint. If I do not mistake, you carried over with you some of Dr. Monsey's powders: Have you taken any of them, and have they done you any good? I know they did me a great deal. I, who pretend to fome skill in physic, advise a cool regimen, and cooling medicines.

I de

I d

his P utterl

for th

fame

G-

been

miffio

Gene

to a r

of Ir

he wi

up hi

do i

him,

breal

I will Imm

one, G

healt

M

ugly grea

5

"_

alf.

that hip's

nity

fpe.

will

, in pody

dant

u at orda

o far

with obe.

766

f the

you. If ne of

y of

Wons

fome

oling

I de

I do not wonder, that you do wonder at Lord C-'s conduct. If he was not outwitted into his Peerage by Lord B-, his accepting it is utterly inexplicable. The inftruments he has chosen for the great Offices, I believe, will never fit the fame case. It was cruel to put such a boy as Lord G-, over the head of old Ligonier; and if I had been the former, I would have refused that commission, during the life of that honest and brave old General. All this to quiet the Duke of Rto a refignation, and to make Lord B- Lieutenant of Ireland, where, I will venture to prophefy, that he will not do. Ligonier was much pressed to give up his regiment of guards, but would by no means do it; and declared, that the King might break him, if he pleased, but that he would certainly not break himself.

I have no political events to inform you of; they will not be ripe till the meeting of the Parliament. Immediately upon the receipt of this letter, write me one, to acquaint me how you are.

God bless you; and particularly, may he send you health, for that is the greatest blessing!

LETTER CCCCIII.

Blackheath, September the 30th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received yesterday, with great pleasure, your letter of the 18th, by which I consider this last ugly bout as over; and, to prevent its return, I greatly approve of your plan for the South of France,

where where I recommend for your principal residence, Pezenas, Toulouse, or Bourdeaux; but do not be persuaded to go to Aix en Provence, which by experience I know to be at once the hottest and the coldest place in the world, from the ardour of the Provençal Sun, and the sharpness of the Alpine winds. I also earnestly recommend to you, for your complaint upon your breast, to take, twice a day, asses or (what is better) mare's milk, and that for these six months at least. Mingle turnips, as much as you can, with your diet.

I have written, as you defired, to Mr. Secretary Conway; but I will answer for it, there will be no difficulty to obtain the leave you ask.

There is no new event in the political world, fince my last; so God bless you!

LETTER CCCCIV.

London, October the 29th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

THE last mail brought me your letter of the 17th. I am glad to hear that your breast is so much better. You will find both asses and mares milk enough in the South of France, where it was much drank when I was there. Guy Patin recommends to a patient to have no Doctor but a Horse; and no Apothecary but an Ass. As for your pains and weakness in your limbs, je wous en offre amount; I have never been free from them since my last rheumatism. I use my legs as much as I can, and you I can weal ferenday, weat hope give veffe for told amo expethe know riou from

the fere bett
are
and fome

I

nce,

be er.

the

the pine

your day,

for nuch

tary

e no

fince

766.

the if is

was comorfe;

ains

ant ;

laft

and you you should do so too, for disuse makes them worse. I cannot now use them long at a time, because of the weakness of old-age; but I contrive to get, by disserent snatches, at least two hours walking every day, either in my garden or within doors, as the weather permits. I set out to-morrow for Bath, in hopes of half repairs, for Medea's kettle could not give me whole ones; the timbers of my wretched ressel are too much decayed to be fitted out again for use. I shall see poor Harte there, who, I am told, is in a miserable way, between some real and some imaginary distempers.

I send you no political news, for one reason, among others, which is, that I know none. Great expectations are raised of this session, which meets the 11th of next month: but of what kind nobody knows, and consequently every body conjectures variously. Lord Chatham comes to town to-morrow from Bath, where he has been to resit himself for the winter campaign: he has hitherto but an indisferent set of Aides de Camp; and where he will find better, I do not know. Charles Townshend and he are already upon ill terms. Ensin je n'y vois goute; and so God bless you!

LETTER CCCCV.

Bath, November the 15th, 1766.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Have this moment received your letter of the 5th instant from Base. I am very glad to find that your breast is relieved, though, perhaps, at the expence of your legs: for, if the humour be either gouty or rheumatic, it had better be in your less than any where else. I have consulted Moify, the great physician of this place, upon it; who fays, that at this distance he dares not prescribe any thing, as there may be such different causes for your com. plaint, which must be well weighed by a physician upon the spot; that is, in short, that he knows no. thing of the matter. I will therefore tell you my own case, in 1732, which may be something parallel to yours. I had that year been dangerously ill of a fever in Holland; and when I was recovered of it. the febrific humour fell into my legs, and swelled them to that degree, and chiefly in the evening. that it was as painful to me, as it was shocking m others. I came to England with them in this condition; and confulted Mead, Broxholme, and Arbuth. not, who none of them did me the least good; but, on the contrary, increased the swelling, by applying pultices and emollients. In this condition I remained near fix months, till, finding that the dotors could do me no good, I resolved to consult Palmer, the most eminent surgeon of St. Thomas's Hospital. He immediately told me, that the phyficians had purfued a very wrong method, as the fwelling of my legs proceeded only from a relaxation and weakness of the cutaneous vessels; and he must apply strengtheners instead of emollients. Accordingly, he ordered me to put my legs up to the knees every morning, in brine from the falters, as hot as I could bear it: the brine must have had meat falted in it. I did fo; and after having thus pickled my legs for about three weeks, the complaint pl le: fa re: vie

th an go of

in

be you Sar

F

out

fien

priv fpec Suci force

May tribu God

Vo

10

3,

n.

22

10-

my liel

of fit.

ell-

ing,

g to adi-

uth-

but.

oply-

I re-

doc

Palmu's phy-

as the elaxa-

and be

Acto the ters, as we had ag thus e complaint plaint absolutely ceased, and I have never had the least swelling in them since. After what I have said, I must caution you not to use the same remedy rashly, and without the most skilful advice you can find, where you are; for if your swelling proceeds from a gouty, or rheumatic humour, there may be great danger in applying so powerful an astringent, and perhaps repellent, as brine. So gopiano, and not without the best advice, upon a view of the parts.

I shall direct all my letters to you Chez Monfieur Sarrazin, who by his trade is, I suppose, fedentaire at Basse, which it is not sure that you will be at any one place, in the South of France. Do you know that he is a descendant of the French poet Sarrazin?

Poor Harte, whom I frequently go to see here, out of compassion, is in the most miserable way; he has had a stroke of the palsy, which has deprived him of the use of his right leg, affected his speech a good deal, and perhaps his head a little. Such are the intermediate tributes that we are forced to pay, in some shape or other, to our wretched nature, till we pay the last great one of all. May you pay this very late, and as sew intermediate tributes as possible; and so jubeo to bene walere. God bless you!

LETTER CCCCVI.

Bath, December the 9th, 1766.

lig

ma bu

we

fo

to hav

a ft

this fha!

yea

diti

wish

M

T fouth

you,

fnatc

upon

you a thing

Parlia

where

of the power

Ih

F

MY DEAR FRIEND,

T Received, two days ago, your letter of the 26th paft. I am very glad that you begin to feel the good effects of the climate where you are; I know it faved my life, in 1741, when both the skilful and the unskilful gave me over. In that ramble I stayed three or four days at Nîmes, where there are more remains of antiquity, I believe, than in any town in Europe. Italy excepted. What is falfely called la maifon quar. ree, is, in my mind, the finest piece of architecture that I ever faw; and the amphitheatre the clumfielt and the ugliest: if it were in England, every body would fwear it had been built by Sir John Vanbrugh.

This place is now, just what you have seen it formerly; here is a great crowd of triffing and unknown people, whom I seldom frequent, in the public rooms; fo that I pass my time très uniment, in taking the air in my post-chaife every morning, and reading in the evenings. And à propos of the latter, I stall point out a book, which I believe will give you fome pleasure; at least it gave me a great deal : I never read it before. It is Réflexions sur la Poësse et la Pinture, par l'Abbé de Bos, in two octavo volumes: ad is, I suppose, to be had at every great town in France. The criticisms and the reflections are just and lively.

It may be you expect some political news from me; but I can tell you that you will have none: for no mortal can comprehend the present state of affairs. Eight or nine people, of some consequence, have refigned figned their employments; upon which Lord C—made overtures to the duke of B—and his people; but they could by no means agree, and his Grace went, the next day, full of wrath, to Wooburne: fo that negotiation is intirely at an end. People wait to see who Lord C—will take in, for some he must have; even be cannot be alone, contra Mundum. Such a state of affairs, to be sure, was never seen before, in this or in any other country. When this Ministry shall be settled, it will be the fixth Ministry in six years time.

66.

aft.

ood

ved

un-

ree

ains

ope,

uar-

ture

fieft body ugh.

for-ublic

king

fhall

fome

never

Pein-

and

ance.

rely.

n me;

OF BO

ffairs.

ve reigned

Poor Harte is here, and in a most miserable condition; those who wish him the best, as I do, must wish him dead. God bless you!

LETTER CCCCVII.

London, February the 13th, 1767-MY DEAR FRIEND,

T is so long since I have had a letter from you that I am alarmed about your health; and fear, that the southern parts of France have not done so well by you, as they did by me in the year 1741, when they snatched me from the jaws of death. Let me know, upon the receipt of this letter, how you are, and where you are.

I have no news to fend you from hence: for every thing feems fuspended, both in the Court and in the Parliament, till Lord Chatham's return from the Bath, where he has been laid up this month, by a severe sit of the gout; and, at present, he has the sole apparent power. In what little business has hitherto been done in the House of Commons, Charles Townshend has given himself more Ministerial airs than Lord Chatham will, I believe, approve of. However, fince Lord Chatham has thought fit to withdraw himfelf from that House, he cannot well do without Charles's abilities to manage it as his Deputy.

M 2'

I do not fend you an account of weddings, births. and burials, as I take it for granted that you know them all from the English printed papers; some of which, I presume, are sent after you. Your old acquaintance, Lord Effex, is to be married this week to Harriet Bladen, who has £. 20,000 down, besides the reasonable expectation of as much at the death of her father. My kinfman, Lord Strathmore, is to be mar. ried, in a fortnight, to Miss Bowes, the greatest heirefs perhaps in Europe. In short, the matrimonial phrenzy feems to rage at prefent, and is epidemical. The men marry for money, and I believe you guess

LETTER CCCCVIII.

what the women marry for. God bless you, and fend you health!

London, March the 3d, 1767. MY DEAR FRIEND.

TESTERDAY I received two letters at once from you, both dated Montpellier; one of the 20th of last December, and the other, the 12th of February: but I cannot conceive what became of my letters to you; for I assure you that I answered all yours the next post after I received them; and, about

In

t h

H

h

C

b

th

th

al

fi

Pr

th

laf

ab

To

ma

WO the Mi POL

by Th

tho

all

hil

to I

yest

laft .

fron

9 lf

's

13,

W

of

IC-

to .

he

ner -

ar.

ir-

ial

al.

res

and 767.

once

the

h of fmy

all

bout

ten

ten days ago, I wrote you a volunteer, because you had been so long silent; and I was afraid that you were not well: but your letter of the 12th February has removed all my sears upon that score. The same climate that has restored your health so far, will probably, in a little more time, restore your strength too; though you must not expect it to be quite what it was before your late painful complaints, At least I find, that, since my late great rheumatism, I cannot walk above half an hour at a time, which I do not place singly to the account of my years, but chiefly to the great shock given then to my limbs. D'ailleurs I am pretty well for my age, and shattered constitution.

As I told you in my last, I must tell you again in this, that I have no news to send. Lord Chatham, at last, came to town yesterday, full of gout, and is not able to stir hand or foot. During his absence, Charles Townshend has talked of him and at him, in such a manner, that henceforwards they must be either much worse or much better together than ever they were in their lives. On Friday last, Mr. Dowdeswell and Mr. Grenville moved to have one shilling in the pound of the land-tax taken off; which was opposed by the Court; but the Court lost it by eighteen. The Opposition triumph much upon this victory; though, I think, without reason; for it is plain that all the landed gentlemen bribed themselves with this shilling in the pound.

The Duke of Buccleugh is very foon to be married to Lady Betty Montague. Lord Effex was married, yesterday, to Harriet Bladen; and Lord Strathmore, last week, to Miss Bowes; both couples went directly from the church to consummation in the country, from an unnecessary fear that they should not be tired of each other, if they stayed in town. And now din; God bless you!

M 3

li

n

W

W

If

h

Si

CO

th

You are in the right to go to see the Assembly of the States of Languedoc, though they are but the shadow of the original Etats, while there was some liberty subsisting in France.

LETTER CCCCIX.

London, April the 6th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

TESTERDAY I received your letter from Nîmes, by which I find that several of our letters have reciprocally miscarried. This may probably have the same fate; however, if it reaches Monsieur Sarrazin, I presume he will know where to take his aim at you: for I find you are in motion, and with a Polarity to Dresden. I am very glad to find by it, that your Meridional journey has perfectly recovered you, as to your general state of health : for as to your legs and thighs, you must never expect that they will be restored to their original strength and activity, after so many rheumatic attacks as you have had. I know that my limbs, besides the natural debility of old-age, have never recovered the fevere attack of rheumatism that plagued me five or fix years ago. I cannot now walk above half an hour at a time, and even that in a hobbling kind of way.

I can give you no account of our political world, which is in a fituation that I never faw in my whole life.

life. Lord Chatham has been so ill, these last two months, that he has not been able (some say not willing) to do or hear of any business; and for his sous Ministres, they either cannot, or dare not, do any, without his directions; so that every thing is now at a stand. This situation, I think, cannot last much longer; and if Lord Chatham should either quit his post, or the world, neither of which is very improbable, I conjecture, that what is called the Rockingham Connection, stands the fairest for the Ministry. But this is merely my conjecture; for I have neither data nor postulata enough to reason upon.

When you get to Dresden, which I hope you will not do till next month, our correspondence will be more regular. God bless you!

LETTER CCCCX.

London, May the 5th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND.

By your letter of the 25th past, from Basse, I prefume this will find you at Dresden, and accordingly I direct to you there. When you write me word that you are at Dresden, I will return you an answer, with something better than the answer itself.
If you complain of the weather, north of Besançon, what would you say to the weather that we have had here for these last two months, uninterruptedly?
Snow often, north-east wind constantly, and extreme cold. I write this by the side of a good fire; and at this moment it snows very hard. All my promised

M 4

fruit

rld, hole life.

ed

ri:

of

the

me

67.

om letbly eur

his h a

it,

red

our

will

ity,

. I

y of

s of

I

and

248 LORD CHESTERPIELD'S LETTER, fruit at Blackheath is quite destroyed; and, what is worse, many of my trees.

I cannot help thinking that the King of Poland, the Empress of Russia, and the King of Prussia, s'extendent comme Larrens en soire, though the former must not appear in it, upon account of the stupidity, ignorance, and bigotry of his Poles. I have a great opinion of the cogency of the controversial arguments of the Russian troops, in favour of the Dissidents: I am sure, I wish them success; for I would have all intoleration intolerated in its turn. We shall soon see more clearly into this matter; for I do not think that the Autocratrice of all the Russias will be tristed with by the Sarmatians.

What do you think of the late extraordinary event in Spain? Could you ever have imagined that those ignorant Goths would have dared to banish the Jesuits' there must have been some very grave and important reasons for so extraordinary a measure: but what they were I do not pretend to guess; and perhaps I shall never know, though all the cossee-houses here do.

Things are here in exactly the same situation, in which they were when I wrote to you last. Lord Chatham is still ill, and only goes abroad for an hour in a day, to take the air, in his coach. The King has, to my certain knowledge, sent him repeated messages, desiring him not to be concerned at his confinement, for that he is resolved to support him power contre tous. God bless you!

LETTER

1

are

who

con

win

tre

fred

ters

Gre

pen

cha

bod

Mo

diff

who

it u reig

of p rior

to b

I

I

I

LETTER CCCCXI.

tie

nd,

Aut

00-

ion

the

ire.

ion

rly

-OJS

the

ent

12-itt.

ant

hey

hall

10 ord

our

ing

nef-

-000

South

ER

London, June the 1st, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Received yesterday your letter of the 20th past, from Dresden, where I am glad to find that you are arrived safe and sound. This has been everywhere an annus mirabilis for bad weather; and it continues here still. Every body has sires, and their winter clothes, as at Christmas. The town is extremely sickly; and sudden deaths have been very frequent.

I do not know what to say to you upon public matters; things remain in statu quo, and nothing is done. Great changes are talked of, and I believe will happen soon, perhaps next week; but who is to be changed, for whom, I do not know, though every body else does. I am apt to think that it will be a Mosaic Ministry, made up de pieces rapportées from different connections.

Last Friday I fent your subsidy to Mr. Larpent, who, I suppose, has given you notice of it. I believe it will come very seasonably, as all places, both so-reign and domestic, are so far in arrears. They talk of paying you all up to Christmas. The King's inferior servants are almost starving.

I suppose you have already heard at Dresden, that Count Brühl is either actually married, or very soon to be so, to Lady Egremont. She has, together with her salary as Lady of the Bedchamber, £. 2500 a year; besides ten thousand pounds in money left her, at her own disposal, by Lord Egremont. All this will sound great en écus d'Allemagne. I am glad of it; for he is a very pretty man. God bless you!

M 5

250 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

I easily conceive why Orloss influences the Empress of all the Russias; but I cannot see why the King of Prussia should be influenced by that motive.

LETTER CCCCXII.

Blackheath, July the 2d, 1767.

h

Y

T

I

la b d

lo

f

li

fo

fu

fh

le

tr

ly

th

ar

uf

he

pu

MY DEAR FRIEND,

HOUGH I have had no letter from you fince my last, and though I have no political news to inform you of, I write this to acquaint you with a piece of Greenwich news, which I believe you will be very glad of; I am fure I am. Know then, that your friend Miss * * was happily married, three days ago, to Mr. * * *, an Irish gentleman, and a Member of that Parliament, with an estate of above two thousand pounds a year. He settles upon her f. 600 a jointure, and in case they have no children, f. 1500. He happened to be by chance in her company one day here, and was at once shot dead by her charms; but as dead men fometimes walk, he walked to her the next morning, and tendered her his person and his fortune; both which, taking the one with the other, she very prudently accepted, for his person is fixty years old.

Ministerial affairs are still in the same ridiculous and doubtful situation as when I wrote to you last. Itord Chatham will neither hear of nor do any business, but lives at Hampstead, and rides about the heath: heath: his gout is faid to be fallen upon his nerves. Your provincial Secretary, Conway, quits this week, and returns to the army, for which he languished. Two Lords are talked of to succeed him; Lord Egmont, and Lord Hillsborough: I rather hope the latter. Lord Northington certainly quits this week; but nobody guesses who is to succeed him, as President. A thousand other changes are talked of, which I neither believe nor reject.

Poor Harte is in a most miserable condition: he has lost one side of himself, and in a great measure his speech; notwithstanding which, he is going to publish his divine poems, as he calls them. I am sorry for it, as he had not time to correct them before this stroke, nor abilities to do it since. God bless you!

LETTER CCCCXIII.

Blackheath, July the 9th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I Have received yours of the 21st past, with the enclosed proposal from the French refugies, for a subscription towards building them un Temple. I have shown it to the very sew people I see, but without the least success. They told me (and with too much truth) that whilst such numbers of poor were literally starving here, from the dearness of all provisions, they could not think of sending their money into another country, for a building which they reckoned useless. In truth, I never knew such misery as is here now; and it affects both the hearts and the purses of those who have either: for my own part, I never

M 6

er of fand oinjoo. one one and the on is lous laft.

ufi-

the

th:

this

of

refs

g of 67.

nce

s to

h a l be

igo,

252 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

never gave to a building in my life; which I reckon is only giving to masons and carpenters, and the treafurer of the undertaking.

Contrary to the expectations of all mankind here, every thing still continues in statu quo. General Conway has been desired by the King to keep the seals till he has found a successor for him, and the Lord President the same. Lord Chatham is relapsed, and worse than ever: he sees no body, and no body sees him: it is said, that a bungling Physician has checked his gout, and thrown it upon his nerves; which is the worst distemper that a Minister or a Lover can have, as it debilitates the mind of the former, and the body of the latter. Here is at present an interregnum. We must soon see what order will be produced from this chaos.

The Electorate, I believe, will find the want of Comte Flemming; for he certainly had abilities; and was as sturdy and inexorable as a Minister at the head of the sinances ought always to be. When you see Comtesse Flemming, which I suppose cannot be of some time, pray make her Lady Chestersield's and my compliments of condolence.

You say that Dresden is very sickly; I am sure London is at least as sickly now, for there reigns an epidemical distemper, called by the genteel name of l'influenza. It is a little sever, of which scarcely any body dies; and it generally goes off with a little looseness. I have escaped it, I believe, by being here. God keep you from all distempers, and bless you!

15

2 5

wi

the

ho

far

70

do

If

M

me

th

wl

CO

fee

ab

lef

wh

mi

the wit

LETTER CCCCXIV.

ls

rd

be

23

ed

is an nd

-15

-01

of

ind ead fee

of

and are 20

e of any

ofe-

ere

ER

1

London, October the 30th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

T Have now left Blackheath, till the next fummer. I if I live till then; and am just able to write, which is all I can fay, for I am extremely weak, and have in a great measure lost the use of my legs; I hope they will recover both flesh and strength, for at present they have neither. I go to the Bath next week, in hopes of half repairs at most; for those waters, I am fure, will not prove Medea's kettle, nor les eaux de Touvence to me; however, I shall do as good Courtiers do, and get what I can, if I cannot get what I will. I fend you no politics, for here are neither politics nor Ministers: Lord Chatham is quiet at Pynsent, in Somersetshire, and his former subalterns do nothing, fo that nothing is done. Whatever places or preferments are disposed of, come evidently from Lordwho effects to be invisible; and who, like a woodcock, thinks that, if his head is but hid, he is not feen at all.

 254 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS tors of this immense wealth ought to have been so, but they never were.

God bless you, and fend you good health, which is better than all the riches of the world!

LETTER CCCCXV.

London, November the 3d, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

VOUR last letter brought me but a scurvy account of your health. For the head-achs you complain of, I will venture to prescribe a remedy, which, by experience, I found a specific, when I was extremely plagued with them. It is, either to chew ten grains of rhubarb every night going to bed; or, what I think rather better, to take, immediately before dinner, a couple of rhubarb pills, of five grains each; by which means it mixes with the aliments, and will, by degrees, keep your body gently open. I do it to this day, and find great good by it. As you feem to dread the approach of a German winter, I would advise you to write to General Conway, for leave of absence for the three rigorous winter months, which I dare fay will not be refused. If you chases worse climate, you may come to London; but if you chuse a better and a warmer, you may go to Niceen Provence, where Sir William Stanhope is gone to pass his winter, who, I am fure, will be extremely glad of your company there.

I go to the Bath next Saturday: Utinam ne fraftra. God bless you!

CO

go ne

wl

fel

kn

tin

an

of

at

mo

int

no

fine

nor

ter

his ish

LETTER CCCCXVI.

fo,

is

ac-

you

dy.

Was

WS

01,

be-ins

ots,

en.

HOU

, I

for hs.

fe a

POU

en.

afs

of ra.

R

Bath, December the 19th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Y ESTERDAY I received your letter of the 29th past, and am very glad to find that you are well enough to think, that you may perhaps stand the winter at Dresden; but if you do, pray take care to keep both your body and your limbs exceedingly warm.

As to my own health, it is, in general, as good as I could expect it, at my age; I have a good flomach, a good digestion, and sleep well; but find that I shall never recover the free use of my legs, which are now full as weak as when I first came hither.

You ask me questions, concerning Lord C—, which neither I, nor, I believe, any body but himfelf can answer; however, I will tell you all that I do know, and all that I guess concerning him. This time twelvemonth he was here, and in good health and spirits, except now and then some little twinges of the gout. We saw one another sour or sive times, at our respective houses; but for these last eight months, he has been absolutely invisible to his most intimate friends, les sous Ministres: he would receive no letters, nor so much as open any packet about bussiness.

His Physician, Dr.—, as I am told, had very ignorantly checked a coming fit of the gout, and scattered it about his body; and it fell particularly upon his nerves, so that he continues exceedingly vapourish; and would neither see nor speak to any body, while

256 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

while he was here. I fent him my compliments, and asked leave to wait upon him; but he sent me word. that he was too ill to fee any body whatfoever. I met him frequently taking the air in his post-chaife, and he looked very well. He fet out from hence, for London, last Tuesday; but what to do, whether to resume, or finally to resign the Administration, God knows; conjectures are various. In one of our conversations here, this time twelvemonth, I desired him to secure you a feat in the new Parliament; he as. fured me he would; and, I am convinced, very fincerely: he faid even that he would make it his own affair; and defired I would give myself no more tronble about it. Since that, I have heard no more of it : which made me look out for some venal borough: and I spoke to a borough jobber, and offered fiveand-twenty hundred pounds for a secure seat in Parliament; but he laughed at my offer, and faid, That there was no fuch thing as a borough to be had now; for the rich East and West Indians had fecured them all, at the rate of three thousand pounds at least; but many at four thousand; and two or three, that he knew, at five thousand. This, I confess, has vexed me a good deal; and made me the more impatient to know whether Lord C -- had done any thing in it: which I shall know when I go to town, as I propose to do in about a fortnight; and as foon as I know it, you shall. To tell you truly what I think- doubt, from all these nervous disorders, that Lord C- is bors de combat, as a Minister; but do not even hint this to any body. God bless you!

LETTER

]

it v

15

Pol

for lan

nig We

of (

1 10

wil

out

Ha

ceri

if n

All

Ma

are

by !

S

to ]

with

may thou

I

nd.

net nd

for

to od

on-

im

26-

in-

WN

• DO

of

gh:

We-

11-

id.

had

fe-

nds

or

on-

the

had

go

and hac

ers,

but

u!

ER

LETTER CCCCXVII.

Bath, December the 27th, 1767.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

En nova progenies!

THE outlines of a new Ministry are now declared; but they are not yet quite filled up: it was formed by the Duke of Bedford. Lord Gower is made President of the Council, Lord Sandwich Post-master, Lord Hillsborough Secretary of State, for America only, Mr. Rigby Vice-treasurer of Ireland. General Conway is to keep the feals a fortnight longer, and then to furrender them to Lord Weymouth. It is very uncertain whether the Duke of Grafton is to continue at the head of the Treasury or not; but, in my private opinion, George Grenville will very foon be there. Lord Chatham feems to be out of the question, and is at his re-purchased house at Hayes, where he will not see a mortal. It is yet uncertain whether Lord Shelburne is to keep his place; if not, Lord Sandwich, they fay, is to succeed him. All the Rockingham people are absolutely excluded. Many more changes must necessarily be; but no more are yet declared. It seems to be a resolution taken by somebody, that Ministries are to be annual.

Sir George Macartney is next week to be married to Lady Jane Stuart, Lord Bute's fecond daughter.

I never knew it so cold in my life as it is now, and with a very deep snow; by which, if it continues, I may be snow bound here for God knows how long, though I proposed leaving this place the latter end of the week.

258 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

Poor Harte is very ill here; he mentions you often, and with great affection. God bless you! When I know more, you shall.

LETTER CCCCXVIII.

London, January the 29th, 1768.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I wish you had gone a month, or fix weeks fooner to Basse, that you might have escaped the excessive cold, of the most severe winter that I believe was ever known. It congealed both my body and my mind, and scarcely left me the power of thinking. A great many here, both in town and country, have perished by the frost, and been lost in the snow.

You have heard, no doubt, of the changes at court, by which you have got a new Provincial, Lord Weymouth; who has certainly good parts, and, as I am informed, speaks very well in the House of Lords, but I believe he has no application. Lord Chatham is at his house at Hayes, but sees no mortal. Some say that he has a sit of the gout, which would probably do him good; but many think that his worst complaint is in his head, which I am asraid is too true. Were he well, I am very sure he would realize the promise he made me concerning you; but however, in that uncertainty, I am looking out for any chance borough; and

and a ch wer pro

Ho Ta for

in one

gai bac

had lon

my mu

ful

Ic

-

fir

and if I can find one, I promise you I will bid like a chapman for it, as I should be very forry that you were not in the next Parliament. I do not fee any probability of any vacancy in a foreign commission in a better climate; Mr. Hamilton at Naples, Sir Horace Man at Florence, and George Pitt at Turin, do not feem likely to make one. And as for changing your foreign department for a domestic one, it would not be in my power to procure you one; and you would become d'évêque meunier, and gain nothing in point of climate, by changing a bad one for another full as bad, if not worfe; and a worse I believe is not than ours. I have always had better health abroad than at home; and if the tattered remnant of my wretched life were worth my care, I would have been in the South of France long ago. I continue very lame and weak, and despair of ever recovering any ftrength in my legs. I care very little about it. At my age, every man must have his share of physical ills of one kind or another; and mine, thank God, are not very painful. God blefs you!

LETTER CCCCXIX.

London, March the 12th, 1768.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

THE day after I received your letter of the 21st past, I wrote to Lord Weymouth, as you defired; and I send you his answer enclosed: from which (though I have not heard from him since) I take often.

1768.

weeks
ed the fat I h my town been

res at ncial, parts, House ation. es no gout, many head, ell, I made ncerugh;

and

take it for granted, and so may you, that his filence fignifies his Majesty's confent to your request. Your complicated complaints give me great uneafines, and the more, as I am convinced that the Montpellier phy. ficians have mistaken a material part of your case: as indeed all the physicians here did, except Dr. Maty. In my opinion, you have no gout, but a very scorbutic and rheumatic habit of body, which should be treated in a very different manner from the gout: and, as I pretend to be a very good quack, at leaf, I would prescribe to you a strict milk diet, with the feeds, fuch as rice, fago, barley, millet, &c. for the three fummer months at least, and without ever tif. ing wine. If climate fignifies any thing (in which, by the way, I have very little faith) you are, in my mind, in the finest climate in the world; neither to hot nor too cold, and always clear: you are with the gayest people living; be gay with them, and do not wear out your eyes with reading at home. L'enni is the English distemper; and a very bad one it is, as I find by every day's experience; for my deafness deprives me of the only rational pleasure that I can have at my age, which is fociety; fo that I read my eyes out every day, that I may not hang myfelf.

You will not be in this Parliament, at least not at the beginning of it. I relied too much upon Lord C—'s promise above a year ago, at Bath. He defired that I would leave it to him; that he would make it his own affair, and give it in charge to the Duke of G—, whose province it was to make the parliamentary arrangement. This I depended upos, and I think with reason; but, since that, Lord C—has has n in th of G or fer done over,

> Parlis count fpeak one r

Iam

or M

firlt a

M T Mr.

healt Vien

from

STORE

OUT

and phy-

afe :

Dr.

Very

oold

: 100

eaft.

the

r the taf-

hich,

a my

r too

h the

o not uni is as I is decan d my

ot at

Lord

e de-vould

o the e the 1pos,

has

has neither feen nor spoken to any body, and has been in the oddest way in the world. I sent to the Dof G -, to know if L - C had either fpoken or fent to him about it ; but he affured me that he had done neither: that all was full, or rather running over, at present; but that, if he could crowd you in upon a vacancy, he would do it with great pleasure. I am extremely forry for this accident; for I am of avery different opinion from you, about being in Parliament, as no man can be of consequence in this country, who is not in it; and, though one may not freak like a Lord Mansfield, or a Lord Chatham, one may make a very good figure in a second rank. Lux est et pluribus umbris. I do not pretend to give you any account of the present state of this country. or Ministry, not knowing nor guesting it myself.

God bless you, and send you health, which is the first and greatest of all blessings!

LETTER CCCCXX.

London, March the 15th, 1768.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

This letter is supplemental to my last. This morning Lord Weymouth very civilly sent Mr. Wood, his first commis, to tell me, that the King very willingly gave you leave of absence from your post for a year, for the recovery of your health; but then added, that as the Court of Vienna was tampering with that of Saxony, which it feems our court is defirous to contrequarrer, it might be necessary to have in the interim a Charge d'Affaires at Dresden, with a defalcation out of your appointments of forty shillings a day, till your return, if I would agree to it. I told him, that I consented to both the proposals, upon condition that at your return you should have the character and the pay of Plenipotentiary added to your present character and pay; and that I would completely make up to you the defalcation of the forty shillings a day. He positively engaged for it, and added, that he knew that it would be willingly agreed to. Thus I think I have made a good bargain for you, though but an indifferent one for myfelf; but that is what I never minded in my life. You may, therefore, depend upon receiving from me the full of this defalcation, when and how you please, independently of your usual annual refreshment, which I will pay to Monsieur l'Arpent, whenever you desire it. In the mean time, Cura ut valeas.

262 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

The person whom Mr. Wood intimated to me would be the Chargé d'Affaires during your absence, is one Mr. Keith, the son of that Mr. Keith who was formerly Minister in Russia.

LETTER

N

I.

whi

Kei

hear Cha

that you perf

ther

not.

forti

opin

Lagi

as w

tion

Cou then corri

Northirt has

I

LETTER CCCCXXI.

argi t of your

at I

that

the

cha-

rake

day.

t he

'has agh

what

ore.

de-

ntly

pay

In

me

abeith

ER

London, April the 12th, 1768.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Received, yesterday, your letter of the 1st; in which you do not mention the state of your health, which I desire you will do for the future.

I believe you have gueffed the true reason of Mr. Keith's mission; but, by a whisper that I have since heard, Keith is rather inclined to go to Turin, as Charge d'Affaires. I forgot to tell you, in my last, that I was most positively assured, that the instant vou return to Dresden, Keith should decamp. I am persuaded they will keep their words with me, as there is no one reason in the world why they should not. I will fend your annual to Mr. Larpent, in a fortnight, and pay the forty shillings a day quarterly, if there should be occasion; for, in my own private opinion, there will be no Charge d'Affaires fent. lagree with you, that point d'Argent point d'Allemand, as was used to be said, and not without more reason, of the Swifs; but, as we have neither the inclination nor (I fear) the power to give subsidies, the Court of Vienna can give good things that cost them nothing, as Archbishoprics, Bishoprics, besides corrupting their Ministers and Favourites with places.

Elections, here, have been carried to a degree of frenzy hitherto unheard of; that for the town of Northampton has cost the contending parties at least, thirty thousand pounds a fide, and ________, to two Members, for nine thousand pounds. As soon as Wilkes had loft his election for the City, he fet up for the County of Middlesex, and carried it hollow, as the jockers fay. Here were great mobs and riots upon that oc. casion, and most of the windows in town broke. that had no lights for Wilkes and Liberty, who were thought to be inseparable. He will appear, the 20th of this month, in the Court of King's Bench, to receive his fentence; and then great riots are again expected, and probably will happen. you!

264 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS

LETTER CCCCXXII.

Bath, October the 17th, 1768.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

JOUR two last letters, to myself and Grevenkop, have alarmed me extremely; but I comfort myself a little, by hoping, that you, like all people who fuffer, think yourfelf worse than you are. A dropfy never comes fo fuddenly; and I flatter myfelf, that it is only that gouty or rheumatic humour, which has plagued you fo long, that has occasioned the temporary swelling of your legs. Above forty years ago, after a violent fever, my legs were swelled as much as you describe yours to be; I immediately thought that I had a dropfy; but the Faculty affored me, that my complaint was only the effect of my fever, and would foon be cured; and they faid true. Pray let your amanuensis, whoever he may be, write an account regularly, once a week, either to Grevenkop of y

the

well ther in y pan and for > to b mag Ecc

you bro P

> able fide him

fect ed I V her

I ha tho for flair

(

kop or myfelf, for that is the same thing, of the state of your health.

ad

ity

eys

OC-

ke,

ere

oth

re-

ain

lefs

68.

en-

om-

all

are.

my-

our,

ned

orty

lled

tely

my rue.

write

venkop I fent you, in four successive letters, as much of the Dutchess of Somerset's snuff as a letter could well convey to you. Have you received all or any of them? and have they done you any good? Though, in your present condition, you cannot go into company, I hope you have some acquaintances that come and sit with you; for if originally it was not good for man to be alone, it is much worse for a sick man to be so; he thinks too much of his distemper, and magnifies it. Some men of learning amongst the Ecclesiastics, I dare say, would be glad to sit with you; and you could give them as good as they brought.

Poor Harte, who is here still, is in a most miserable condition; he has entirely lost the use of his lest side, and can hardly speak intelligibly. I was with him yesterday. He inquired after you with great assection, and was in the utmost concern when I showed him your letter.

My own health is as it has been ever fince I was here last year. I am neither well nor ill, but unwell. I have in a manner lost the use of my legs; for though I can make a shift to crawl upon even ground for a quarter of an hour, I cannot go up or down stairs, unless supported by a servant.

God bless, and grant you a speedy recovery!

Here end the letters to Mr. Stanhope, as he died the 16th of November following.

266 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS.

LETTER CCCCXXIII.

To Mrs. Stanhope, then at Paris.

London, March the 16th, 1769.

MADAM,

A Troublesome and painful inflammation in my eyes, obliges me to use another hand than my own, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter from Avignon, of the 27th past.

I am extremely furprifed that Mrs. du-Bouchet should have any objection to the manner in which your late husband desired to be buried, and which you, very properly, complied with. All I desire, for my own burial, is not to be buried alive; but how or where, I think, must be intirely indifferent to every rational creature.

I have no commission to trouble you with, during your stay at Paris; from whence, I wish you and the boys a good journey home; where I shall be very glad to see you all: and assure you of my being, with great truth,

> Your faithful, humble fervant, CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXIV.

To the fame, at London.

MADAM,

HE last time I had the pleasure of seeing you,
I was so taken up in playing with the boys, that I forgot their more important affairs. How soon would

kno kno Per In tho

for the 1 pla

A mor

carr with to y

com dern more blift

well

Tue

would you have them placed at school? When I know your pleasure as to that, I will send to Monsieur Perny, to prepare every thing for their reception. In the mean time, I beg that you will equip them thoroughly with clothes, linen, &c. all good, but plain; and give me the account, which I will pay; for I do not intend, that, from this time forwards, the two boys should cost you one shilling.

I am, with great truth, Madam, Your faithful, humble fervant, Wednesday.

69.

my

my

mon

het

nich nich for how to ring

and very

ing,

ELD.

you,

ooys,

foon

CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXV.

MADAM,

As some day must be fixed for sending the boys to school, do you approve of the 8th of next month? by which time the weather will probably be warm and settled, and you will be able to equip them completely.

I will, upon that day, send my coach to you, to carry you and the boys to Loughborough House, with all their immense baggage. I must recommend to you, when you leave them there, to suppress, as well as you can, the overslowings of maternal tenderness; which would grieve the poor boys the more, and give them a terror of their new establishment.

I am, with great truth, Madam,
Your faithful, humble fervant, Tuefday Morning.
CHESTERFIELD.

N<sub>2</sub> LETTER

LETTER CCCCXXVI.

Bath, October the 11th, 1760.

MADAM,

OBODY can be more willing or ready to obey orders than I am; but then I must like the orders and the orderer. Your orders and yourfelf come under this description; and therefore I must give you an account of my arrival and existence, such as it is, here. I got hither last Sunday, the day after I lest London, less fatigued than I expected to have been; and now crawl about this place upon my three legs, but am kept in countenance by many of my fellow crawlers: the last part of the Sphynx's riddle approaches, and I shall soon end, as I began, upon all sours.

When you happen to see either Monsieur or Madame Perny, I beg you will give them this melancholick proof of my caducity, and tell them, that the last time I went to see the boys, I carried the Michaelmas quarteridge in my pocket, and when I was there I totally forgot it; but affure them, that I have not the least intention to bilk them, and will pay them faithfully the two quarters together, at Christmas.

I hope our two boys are well; for then I am sure you are so.

I am, with great truth and esteem,
Your most faithful, humble servant, CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER

01

1

and gene

auth

qua I ha you

put

LETTER CCCCXXVII.

Bath, October the 28th, 1769.

MADAM,

YOUR kind anxiety for my health and life, is more than, in my opinion, they are both worth: without the former, the latter is a burthen; and, indeed, I am very weary of it. I think I have got fome benefit by drinking these waters, and by bathing, for my old, sliff, rheumatic limbs; for I believe I could now outcrawl a snail, or perhaps even a tortoise.

I hope the boys are well. Phil, I dare fay, has been in some scrapes; but he will get triumphantly out of them, by dint of strength and resolution.

> I am, with great truth and esteem, Your most faithful, humble servant.

> > CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXVIII.

Bath, November the 5th, 1769.

MADAM.

I Remember very well the paragraph which you quote from a letter of mine to Mrs. du-Bouchet, and I fee no reason yet to retract that opinion, in general, which at least nineteen widows in twenty had authorised. I had not then the pleasure of your acquaintance: I had seen you but twice or thrice; and I had no reason to think that you would deviate, as you have done, from other widows, so much, as to put perpetual shackles upon yourself, for the sake of your 69.

N 3

v to like ournuft

nce, day

d to

nany na's gan,

Ma-

the

that fure

ELD.

ER

270 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS.

your children: but (if I may use a vulgarism) one swallow makes no summer: five righteous were formerly necessary to save a city, and they could not be found; so, till I find sour more such righteous widows as yourself, I shall entertain my former notions of widowhood in general.

I can affure you that I drink here very foberly and cautiously, and at the same time keep so cool a diet, that I do not find the least symptom of heat, much less of inflammation. By the way, I never had that complaint, in consequence of having drank these waters; for I have had it but four times, and always in the middle of summer. Mr. Hawkins is timorous, even to minuties, and my sister delights in them.

Charles will be a scholar, if you please; but our little Philip, without being one, will be something or other as good, though I do not yet guess what. I am not of the opinion generally entertained in this country, that man lives by Greek and Latin alone; that is, by knowing a great many words of two dead languages, which no body living knows perfectly, and which are of no use in the common intercourse of life. Useful knowledge, in my opinion, consists of modern languages, history, and geography; some Latin may be thrown into the bargain, in compliance with custom and for closet amusement.

You are, by this time, certainly tired with this long letter, which I could prove to you from Horace's own words (for I am a fcholar) to be a bad one; he fays, that water drinkers can write nothing good: so I am, with real truth and esteem,

Your most faithful, humble fervant,

CHESTERFIELD. LETTER la

ca

ar

I

de

Y

or l

25

at

G

ye

LETTER CCCCXXIX.

Bath, October the 9th, 1770.

MADAM.

one

ornot

ous

no-

and

la

eat.

had

refe

278 ous,

our gor

am

un-

that

an-

and

e of

s of

ome

nnce

this

nce's one; ood:

ER

I AM extremely obliged to you for the kind part which you take in my health and life: as to the latter, I am as indifferent myfelf, as any other body can be; but as to the former, I confess care and anxiety; for while I am to crawl upon this Planet, I would willingly enjoy the health at least of an insect. How far these waters will restore me to that moderate degree of health, which alone I aspire at, I have not yet given them a fair trial, having drank them but one week; the only difference I hitherto find is, that I sleep better than I did.

I beg that you will neither give yourself, nor Mr. Fitzhugh, much trouble about the Pine plants; for as it is three years before they fruit, I might as well, at my age, plant Oaks, and hope to have the advantage of their timber: however, somebody or other, God knows who, will eat them, as somebody or other will fell and sell the Oaks I planted sive-and-forty years ago.

I hope our boys are well; my respects to them both.

I am, with the greatest truth,

Your faithful, humble servant,

CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXX.

Bath, November the 4th, 1770.

for

my

in ad

th

fic

MADAM,

HE post has been more favourable to you than I intended it should; for, upon my word, I answered your former letter, the post after I had received it. However you have got a loss, as we say sometimes in Ireland.

My friends from time to time require bills of health from me in these suspicious times, when the Flague is busy in some parts of Europe. All I can say, in answer to their kind inquiries, is, that I have not the distemper properly called the plague; but that I have all the plagues of old-age, and of a shattered carcase. These waters have done me what little good I expected from them; though by no means what I could have wished, for I wished them to be say eaux de Jouvence.

I had a letter, the other day, from our two boys; Charles's was very finely written, and Philip's very prettily: they are perfectly well, and fay that they want nothing. What grown-up people will or can fay as much?

I am, with the truest esteem,

Madam,

Your most faithful servant,

CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXXI.

Bath, October the 27th, 1771.

MADAM.

70.

You

my fter

35

of

the

can

ave

but lat-

ttle

203 les

ys; ery hey

can

LD.

R

U PON my word, you interest yourself, in the state of my existence, more than I do myself; for it is worth the care of neither of us. I ordered my valet de chambre, according to your orders, to inform you of my safe arrival here; to which I can add nothing, being neither better nor worse than I was then.

I am very glad that our boys are well. Pray give them the enclosed.

I am not at all surprised at Mr. ——'s conversion; for he was, at seventeen, the idol of old women, for his gravity, devotion, and dullness.

> I am, Madam, Your most faithful, humble servant,

CHESTERFIELD.

LETTER CCCCXXXII.

To Charles and Philip Stanhope.

Bath, October the 27th, 1771.

Received, a few days ago, two the best written letters that ever I saw in my life; the one signed Charles Stanhope, the other Philip Stanhope. As for you, Charles, I did not wonder at it; for you will take pains, and are a lover of letters: but you N 5 idle rogue, you Phil, how came you to write so well, that one can almost say of you two, et cantare pares et respondere parati? Charles will explain this Latin to you.

274 LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS.

I am told, Phil, that you have got a nick-name at school, from your intimacy with Master Strange. ways; and that they call you Master Strangerweys; for, to be sure, you are a strange boy. Is this true?

Tell me what you would have me bring you both from hence, and I will bring it you, when I come to town. In the mean time, God bless you both!

CHESTERFIELD

S

I

6

THE END OF THE LETTERS.

MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

CCCCXXXIII.

Some Account of the Government of the Republic of the Seven United Provinces.

THE Government of the Republic of the Seven United Provinces, is thought by many to be Democratical; but it is merely Aristocratical*; the people not having the least share in it, either themselves, or by representatives of their own chusing: they have nothing to do but to pay and grumble.

The Sovereign Power is commonly thought to be in the States General, as they are called, refiding at the Hague. It is no such thing; they are only limited Deputies, obliged to consult their Constituents upon every point of any importance that occurs. It is very true, that the Sovereign Power is lodged in the States General; but who are those States Gene-

* The Members of the Senate, or Vrootschaps, were originally elected by the Burghers, in a general, and often a tumultuous affembly: but now for near two hundred years, the Vrootschaps found means to persuade the people, that these elections were troublesome and dangerous; and kindly took upon themselves to elect their own Members, upon vacancies; and to keep their own body full, without troubling the people with an election: it was then that the Aristocracy was established.

N 6

ral?

L ell, tres

ge.

oth

e to

LA

ral? Not those who are commonly called so; but the Senate, Council, or Vreetschaps, call it what you will, of every town, in every Province that fends Deputies to the Provincial States of the faid Province. These Vrootschaps are in truth the States General: but were they to affemble, they would amount, for ought I know, to two or three thousand; it is, there. fore, for conveniency and dispatch of business, that every Province fends Deputies to the Hague, who are constantly assembled there; who are commonly called the States General, and in whom many people falfely imagine that the Sovereign Power is lodged. These Deputies are chosen by the Vrootschaps; but their powers are extremely circumscribed; and they can confent to * nothing, without writing, or returning themselves, to their several constituent towns, for instructions in that particular case. They are authorised to concur in matters of order; that is, to continue things in the common, current, ordinary train; but for the least innovation, the least step out of the ordinary course, new instructions must be given; either to deliberate or to conclude.

Many people are ignorant enough, to take the Province of Holland, fingly, for the Republic of the fpe

wi

tan

it i

me

and has diti

the

in !

ma

rea

fran Mo

pro

tre

the

of i

wh

obf

pof

fen

and

WO

the ref

Wit

avo

if i

tio

* When the Deputies of the States figned the Triple Alliance with Sir William Temple, in two or three days time, and without consulting their Principals (however Sir William Temple values himself upon it) in reality, they only figned Sub Spe Rati. The act was not valid; and had it not been ratified by the several Constituents of the several Provinces, it had been as non avenu. The Deputies who signed that treaty Sub Spe Rati, knew well enough that, considering the nature of the treaty, and the then situation of affairs, they should not only be avowed, but approved of by their Masters the States.

Seven United Provinces; and when they mean to foeak of the Republic, they fay, * Holland will, or will not, do fuch a thing : but most people are igno-

10

u

ds e.

1:

10

2.

at

re

ed

le

d.

ut

ey

n-

16,

re

to ry

ut n;

0-

he

300 out

ues

he

n-

he

gh

of eir

CD

* When the Province of Holland has once taken an important resolution, of Peace, or War, or Accession to any treaty, it is very probable that the other Provinces will come into that measure, but by no means certain: it is often a great while first; and when the little Provinces know that the Province of Holland has their concurrence much at heart, they will often annex conditions to it: as the little towns in Holland frequently do, when the great ones want their concurrence. As for instance; when I was foliciting the accession of the Republic to the treaty of Vienna, in 1731; which the Pensionary, Comte Sinzendorf, and I, had made fecretly at the Hague; all the towns in Holland came pretty readily into it, except the little town of Briel; whose Deputies frankly declared, that they would not give their confent, till Major such-a-one, a very honest gentleman of their town, was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; and that, as foon as that was done, they would agree, for they approved of the treaty. This was accordingly done in two or three days, and then they agreed. This is a strong instance of the absurdity of the unanimity required, and of the use that is often made However, should one, or even two, of the lesser Provinces, who contribute little, and often pay less to the public charge, obstinately and frivolously, or perhaps corruptly, perfift in oppoling a measure which Holland and the other more confiderable Provinces thought necessary, and had agreed to, they would fend a Deputation to those opposing Provinces, to reason with and perfuade them to concur; but if this would not do, they would, as they have done in many instances, conclude without them. The same thing is done in the Provincial States of the respective Provinces; where, if one or two of the least considerable towns pertinaciously oppose a necessary measure, they conclude without them. But as this is absolutely unconstitutional, it is avoided as much as possible, and a complete unanimity procured, if it can be, by fuch little concessions as that which I have mentioned to the Briel Major.

ha

CO

R

pl

if fa

gr

W

fla

th

St

fu

his

Pe

25

up an tu

ho

lic

up

fol

inc

to ]

and pro

Sans

mai

Ary

rant enough to imagine, that the Province of Holland has a legal, a conflictutional power over the other fix; whereas, by the Act of Union, the little Province of Groningen is as much Sovereign as the Province of Holland. The Seven Provinces are Seven distinct Sovereignties, confederated together in one Republic; no one having any superiority over, or dependence upon any other: nay, in point of precedence, Holland is but the second, Gueldres being the first. It is very natural to suppose, and it is very true in fact, that Holland, from its superiority of strength and riches, and paying 58 per cent. should have great weight and influence in the other fix Provinces; but power it has none.

The unanimity, which is conflictutionally requifite for every act of each town, and each Province feparately; and then for every act of the Seven collectively; is fomething fo abfurd, and fo impracticable in government, that one is aftonished, that even the form of it has been tolerated fo long; for the substance is not strictly observed. And five Provinces will often conclude, though two diffent, provided that Holland and Zeland are two of the five-as fourteen or fifteen of the principal towns of Holland will conclude an affair, notwithstanding the opposition of four or five of the lesser. I cannot help conjecturing, that William, the first Prince of Orange, called the Taciturne, the ablest man, without dispute, of the age he lived in, not excepting even the Admiral Coligny *, and who had

* I am perfuaded, that had the Taciturne been in the place of the Admiral Coligny, he would never have been prevailed upon

er

0-

0-

en

ne

.

og

17 ıld

10-fite

nce

ven

m.

ed,

ng;

five

ent,

the

wns

. I

firft

bleft

not

who had ce of

upon

had the modelling of the Republic as he pleased; I conjecture, I say, that the Prince of Orange would never have suffered such an absurdity to have crippled that government, which he was at the head of, if he had not thought it useful to himself and his family. He covered the greatest ambition with the greatest modesty, and declined the infignificant, outward figns, as much as he defired the folid fubfance of power: Might he not therefore think, that this absurd, though requisite unanimity, made a Stadthouder absolutely necessary, to render the government practicable? In which case he was very fore the Stadthouder would always be taken out of his family; and he minded things, not names. The Pensionary * thinks this conjecture probable; and as we were talking the other day, confidentially, upon this subject, we both agreed that this monstrous and impracticable unanimity, required by the conftitution, was alone sufficient to bring about a Stadthouder, in spite of all the measures of the Republican party to prevent it. He confessed to me, that upon his being made Pensionary, he entered into folemn engagements, not to contribute, directly or indirectly, to any change of the present form of go-to have come to Paris, and to have put himself into the power of those two monsters of persidy and cruelty, Catharine of Medicis and Charles the Ninth. His prudent escape from Flanders is a proof of it; when he rather chose to be Prince sans terre, than Prince sans tête.

Monsieur Slingelandt, the ablest Minister, and the honestest man I ever knew. I may justly call him my Friend, my Master, and my Guide. For I was then quite new in business; he instructed me, he loved, he trusted me.

vernment, vernment, and that he would scrupulously observe those engagements; but that he foresaw the desess in their form of government, and the abuses crept into every part of it, would infallibly produce a Stadthouder, tumultuously imposed upon the Republic, by an insurrection of the populace, as in the case of King William. I told him, that, in my opinion, if that were to happen a second time, the Stadthouder so made, would be their King +. He said, he believed so too; and that he had urged all this to the most considerable Members of the Government, and the most jealous Republicans. That he had even formed a plan which he had laid before them, as the only possible one to prevent this impending danger. That a Stadthouder was originally the

* It has fince appeared that he judged very rightly.

+ And so he ought to be now, even for the sake and prefervation of the Seven Provinces. The necessary principle of a Republic, Virtue, subfifts no longer there. The great riches of private people (though the public is poor) have long ago extinguished that principle, and destroyed the equality necessary to a Commonwealth. A Commonwealth is unquestionably, upon paper, the most rational and equitable form of government; but it is as unquestionably impracticable, in all countries where riches have introduced luxury, and a great inequality of conditions. It will only do in those countries that poverty keeps virtuous. In England, it would very foon grow a tyrannical Aristocracy; foon afterwards, an Oligarchy; and foon after that, an absolute Monarchy: from the same cause that Denmark, in the last century, became fo; the intolerable oppression of the bulk of the people, from those whom they looked upon as their equals. If the young Stadthouder has abilities, he will, when he grows up, get all the powers of a limited Monarchy, fuch as England, no matter under what name; and if he is really wife, he will defire no more: if the people are wife, they will give it him.

chief

ch

an mı

Suc

ed

on inf

the

ed

on 211 be T of of

m tio

21 im

W

th

O

lir

be pe

m

po

fe

pr

W

U

pr

th

ve

as.

pt

2

e-

he pi-

he

He

all

D-

he

ore

ıd-

the

ier-

of a

s of tin-

to a

pon but ches

lt

In

foon

Mo-

tury,

oung

Il the

nder

: if

hief

chief spring upon which their government turned; and that, if they would have no Stadthouder, they muft fubstitute a succedaneum. That one part of that succedaneum must be to abolish the unanimity required by the present form of government, and which only a Stadthouder could render practicable by his influence. That the abuses which were crept into the military part of the government, must be corrected, or that they alone, if they were suffered to go on, would make a Stadthouder; in order that the army and the navy, which the public paid for, might be of some use, which at present they were not. That he had laid these and many other considerations of the like nature before them; in the hopes of one of these two things; either to prevail with them to make a Stadthouder unnecessary, by a just reformation of the abuses of the government, and substituting a majority, or, at most, two thirds, to the absurd and impracticable unanimity now requifite: or, if they would not come into these preventive regulations, that they would treat amicably with the Prince of Orange, and give him the Statbouderat, under ftrict limitations, and with effectual provisions for their liberty. But they would listen to neither of these expedients; the first affected the private interests of most of the considerable people of the Republic, whose power and profit arose from those abuses; and the fecond was too contrary to the violent passions and prejudices of Messrs. d'Obdam, Booteslaer, Hallewyn, and other Heads of the high Republican party. Upon this, I faid to the Pensionary, that he had fully proved to me, not only that there would, but that there ought to be a Stadthouder. He replied, "There " will

282 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

" will most certainly be one, and you are young " enough to live to fee it. I hope I shall be out of " the way first; but if I am not out of the world at " that time, I shall be out of my place, and pass the poor remainder of my life in quiet. I only pray " that our new Master, whenever we have him, may " be gently given us. My friend the Greffier * thinks " a Stadthouder absolutely necessary to save the Re-" public, and so do I, as much as he, if they will or not accept of the other expedient: but we are in er very different fituations: he is under no engage. " ments to the contrary, and I am." He then alked me in confidence, whether I had any instructions to promote the Prince of Orange's views and interest I told him truly, I had not; but that, however, I would do it, as far as ever I could, quietly and privately. That he himself had convinced me, that it was for the interest of the Republic, which I honoured and wished well to; and also that it would be a much more efficient Ally to England, under that form of government. "I must own," replied he, "that at " present we have neither strength, secrecy, nordif-" patch." I faid, that I knew that but too well, by my own experience; and I added (laughing) that I looked upon him as the Prince of Orange's greatest enemy; and upon that Prince's violent and impetu-

.

ju

th

of

he of

wh

kn

be far

eve

the

fort

port

not men

have whe

ance

mad

joint enou rity.

there

of he

Vate !

but it

Jequer

vigor

* The Greffier Fagel, who had been Greffier, that is Secretary of State, above fifty years. He had the deepest knowledge of busness, and the soundest judgment, of any man I ever knew in my life: but he had not that quick, that intuitive sagacity, which the Pensionary Slingelandt had. He has often owned to me, that he thought things were gone too far, for any other remedy but a Stadthouder.

ous enemies * to be his best friends; for that, if his (the Pensionary's) plan were to take place, the Prince

ng

of

the

гау

may nks

Re-

will

e in age-

fked

as to ereft

er, I pn-

t was

d and much

m of hat at or dif-

ill, by that I

reatest

petu-

retary of

of buti-

w in my

, which

ne, that dy but a

QUS

These hot-headed Republicans pushed things with the unjustest acrimony against the Prince of Orange. They denied him his rank in the army; and they kept him out of the possession of the Marquisat of Tervere and Flessingen, which were his own patrimony; and by these means gave him the merit with the people, of being unjustly oppressed.

Had he been an abier man himself, or better advised by others, he might have availed himself much more solidly than he did, of the affection, or rather the fury, of the people in his favour, when they tumultuously made him Stadthouder; but he did not know the value and importance of those warm moments, in which he might have fixed and clinched his power. Dazzled with the how and trappings of power, he did not enough attend to the fubfance. He attempted a thing impossible, which was, to please every body: he heard every body, begun every thing, and finished nothing. When the people, in their fury, made him Stadthouder, they defired nothing better than totally to dissolve the Republican form of government. He should have let them. The tumultuous love of the populace must be seized and enjoyed in its first transports; there is no hoarding of it to use upon occasions; it will not keep. The most considerable people of the former government would gladly have compounded for their lives, and would have thought themselves very well off in the castle of Louvestein; where one of the Prince of Orange's predecessors sent some of their meetors in times much less favourable. An affected moderation made him lose that moment. The government is now in a difjointed, loose state. Her R. H. the Gouvernante has not power enough to do much good; and yet she has more power than authority. Peace and economy, both public and domestic, should, therefore, be the fole objects of her politics, during the minority of her son. The public is almost a bankrupt; and her son's private fortune extremely incumbered. She has sense and ambition; but it is, still, the sense and ambition of a woman; that is, inconsequential. What remains to be done, requires a firm, manly, and vigorous mind.

would have very little hopes. He interrupted me here, with faying, Ne craignez rien, Milord, de ce con la; mon plan blesse trop l'interêt particulier, pour être reçu à present que l'amour du public n'éxisse plus. I hought this conversation too remarkable, not to write down the heads of it when I came home.

The Republic has hardly any Navy at all; the fingle fund for the Marine being the small duties upon exports and imports; which duties are not half collected, by the connivance of the Magistrates themselves, who are interested in smuggling; so that the Republic has now no other title, but courtesy, to the name of a Maritime Power. Their trade decreases daily, and their national debt increases. I have good reason to believe, that it amounts to at least sity millions sterling.

The decrease of their Herring-fishery, from what it appears by Monsieur de Wit's Memoirs of Holland, in his time, is incredible; and will be much greater, now we are, at last, wise enough to take our own Herrings upon our own coasts.

They do not, now, get by freight one quarter of what they used to get: they were the general sea-carriers of all Europe. The Act of navigation passed in Cromwell's time, and afterwards confirmed in Charles the IId's, gave the first blow to that branch of their profit; and now we carry more than they do. Their only profitable remaining branches of commerce are, their trade to the East-Indies, where they have engrossed the spices; and their illicit trade

in

Gc.

leaf

lity

rem

plin

and nin

eq

foo

his

are

va

wh

7

T

* Never fear, my Lord; a plan so prejudicial to private interest

De

tre

I

ite

in-pon

mthe

ales ood

afty

at it

and,

OWE

er of fez-affed

d in anch

y do.

com-

they

trade

intereft

in

in America from Surinam, St. Eustatia, Curaçoa,

Their woollen and filk manufactures bear not the least comparison with ours, neither in quantity, quality, nor exportation.

Their police is still excellent, and is now the only remains of that prudence, vigilance, and good discipline, which formerly made them esteemed, respected, and courted.

CCCCXXXIV.

MAXIMS.

By the Earl of CHESTERFIELD .

A Proper secrecy is the only mystery of able men; mystery is the only secrecy of weak and cunning ones.

A man who tells nothing, or who tells all, will equally have nothing told him.

If a fool knows a fecret, he tells it because he is a fool; if a knave knows one, he tells it wherever it is his interest to tell it. But women, and young men, are very apt to tell what secrets they know, from the vanity of having been trusted. Trust none of these, whenever you can help it.

Inattention

* These Maxims are referred to in Letter CCXCVIII. p. 12. of this Volume.

Inattention to the present business, be it what it will; the doing one thing, and thinking at the same time of another, or the attempting to do two things at once; are the never-failing signs of a little, frivolous anind.

A man who cannot command his temper, his attention, and his countenance, should not think of being a man of business. The weakest man in the world can avail himself of the passion of the wises. The inattentive man cannot know the business, and consequently cannot do it. And he who cannot command his countenance, may e'en as well tell his thoughts as show them.

Distrust all those who love you extremely upon a very slight acquaintance, and without any visible reason. Be upon your guard, too, against those, who confess as their weaknesses, all the Cardinal virtues.

In your friendships, and in your enmities, let your considence and your hossilities have certain bounds: make not the former dangerous, nor the latter inconcileable. There are strange vicissitudes in business!

Smooth your way to the head, through the heart. The way of reason is a good one; but it is commonly something longer, and perhaps not so sure.

Spirit is now a very fashionable word; to act with Spirit, to speak with Spirit, means only, to act rashly, and to talk indiscreetly. An able man shows his Spirit by gentle words and resolute actions: he is neither hot nor timid.

When a man of sense happens to be in that disagreeable situation, in which he is obliged to ask himself more than once, What shall I do? he will answer himself, him ano littl and fees

nefs that the and is the

P a fo A m but

I

men

I

hear man prob maid nifte good O vide

the l tit

me

3 at 10-

at_

of

the

cf.

and

-00

his

00 2

ible

who

et.

rour

ids:

ITC-

ufi-

art.

only

with hly,

his 1e 15

lifa-

im-

lwer felf. himself, Nothing. When his reason points out to him no good way, or at least no one way less bad than another, he will stop short, and wait for light. A little busy mind runs on at all events, must be doing; and, like a blind horse, fears no dangers, because he sees none. Il faut squoir s'ennuier.

Patience is a most necessary qualification for business; many a man would rather you heard his story, than granted his request. One must feem to hear the unreasonable demands of the petulant, unmoved, and the tedious details of the dull, untired. That is the least price that a man must pay for a high station.

It is always right to detect a fraud, and to perceive a folly; but it is often very wrong to expose either. A man of business should always have his eyes open; but must often seem to have them shut.

In Courts, nobody should be below your management and attention; the links that form the Courtchain are innumerable and inconceivable. You must hear with patience the dull grievances of a Gentleman Usher, or Page of the Back-stairs; who, very probably, lies with some near relation of the favourite maid, of the favourite Mistress, of the favourite Minister, or perhaps of the King himself; and who, consequently, may do you more dark and indirect good, or harm, than the first man of quality.

One good patron at Court may be sufficient, provided you have no personal enemies; and, in order to have none, you must facrifice (as the Indians do to the Devil) most of your passions, and much of your time, to the numberless evil Beings that insess it; in order to prevent and avert the mischiefs they can do you.

A young man, be his merit what it will, can never raise himself; but must, like the ivy round the oak, twine himself round some man of great power and interest. You must belong to a Minister some time, before any body will belong to you. And an inviolable sidelity to that Minister, even in his disgrace, will be meritorious, and recommend you to the next. Ministers love a personal, much more than a party attachment.

As Kings are begotten and born like other men, it is to be prefumed that they are of the human species; and perhaps, had they the same education, they might prove like other men. But, slattered from their cradles, their hearts are corrupted, and their heads are turned, so that they seem to be a species by themselves. No King ever said to himself, Homo sum, nibil bumani a me alienum puto.

Flattery cannot be too strong for them; drunk with it from their infancy, like old drinkers, they require drams.

They prefer a personal attachment to a public fervice, and reward it better. They are vain and weak enough to look upon it as a free-will offering to their merit, and not as a burnt-sacrifice to their power.

If you would be a favourite of your King, address yourself to his weaknesses. An application to his reason will seldom prove very successful.

In Courts, bashfulness and timidity are as prejudicial on one hand, as impudence and rashness are on the other. A steady assurance, and a cool intepidity, re is

pi

De

is wh

ma

in

do

lar be tha qua and wa

an

tell Ch ma

ferv ano the

V

Never apply for what you see very little probability of obtaining; for you will, by asking improper and unattainable things, accustom the Ministers to refuse you so often, that they will find it easy to refuse you the properest, and most reasonable ones. It is a common, but a most mistaken rule at Court, to ask for every thing, in order to get something: you do get something by it, it is true; but that something is refusals and ridicule.

There is a Court jargon, a chit-chat, a small talk, which turns singly upon trifles; and which, in a great many words, says little or nothing. It stands fools instead of what they cannot say, and men of sense instead of what they should not say. It is the proper language of Levees, Drawing-rooms, and Antichambers: it is necessary to know it.

Whatever a man is at Court, he must be genteel and well-bred; that cloak covers as many sollies, as that of charity does fins. I knew a man of great quality, and in a great station at Court, considered and respected, whose highest character was, that he was humbly proud, and genteely dull.

It is hard to fay which is the greatest fool; he who tells the whole truth, or he who tells no truth at all. Character is as necessary in business as in trade. No man can deceive often in either.

At Court, people embrace without acquaintance, ferve one another without friendship, and injure one another without hatred. Interest, not fentiment, is the growth of that soil.

Vol. IV.

er

0-ie.

0-

ce,

Xt.

rty

en,

nan

on,

ered

and be a

felf,

with ublic

and

ering their idress

to his ejudi-

intre-

pidity,

0

A dif-

A difference in opinion, though in the merent trifles, alienates little minds, especially of high rank. It is full as easy to commend as to blame a great man's cook, or his taylor: it is shorter too; and the objects are no more worth disputing about, than the people are worth disputing with. It is impossible to inform, but very easy to displease them.

A chearful, easy countenance and behaviour, are very useful at Court: they make fools think you a good-natured man; and they make designing men think you an undesigning one.

There are some occasions in which a man must tell half his secret, in order to conceal the rest: but there is seldom one in which a man should tell it all. Great skill is necessary to know how far to go, and where to stop.

Ceremony is necessary in Courts, as the outwork and defence of manners.

Flattery, though a base coin, is the necessary pocket-money at Court; where, by custom and confent, it has obtained such a currency, that it is no longer a fraudulent, but a legal payment.

If a Minister refuses you a reasonable request, and either slights or injures you; if you have not the power to gratify your resentment, have the wissom to conceal and dissemble it. Seeming good-humour on your part may prevent rancour on his, and perhaps bring things right again: but if you have the power to hurt, hint modestly, that if provoked, you may possibly have the will too. Fear, when real, and well-founded, is perhaps a more prevailing motive at Courts than love.

At

ca lat

ge

it :

ag

tha

inv

tim

of one

Wa

new

like

CLOA

is ex

only

weig

the i only

who fince

with betw

A

It

M

K

At Court, many more people can hurt, than can help you: please the former, but engage the latter.

Awkwardness is a more real disadvantage than it is generally thought to be; it often occasions ridicule, it always lessens dignity.

A man's own good-breeding is his best security against other people's ill-manners.

reft

nk.

reat

the

the e to

are

ou a men

muf

but

all.

and work

ffary

con-

is no

, and

t the

fdom

mour

per-

ve the

, you

l, and

notive

At

Good-breeding carries along with it a dignity, that is respected by the most petulant. Ill-breeding invites and authorizes the familiarity of the most timid. No man ever said a pert thing to the Duke of Marlborough. No man ever said a civil one (though many a flattering one) to Sir Robert Walpole.

When the old clipped money was called in for a new coinage, in King William's time; to prevent the like for the future, they stamped on the edges of the crown pieces these words, et Decus et Tutamen. That is exactly the case of good-breeding.

Knowledge may give weight, but accomplishments only give lustre; and many more people see than weigh.

Most arts require long study and application; but the most useful art of all, that of pleasing, requires only the desire.

It is to be prefumed, that a man of common fense, who does not desire to please, desires nothing at all; fince he must know that he cannot obtain any thing without it.

A skilful Negotiator will most carefully distinguish between the little and the great objects of his business.

O 2 ness,

ness, and will be as frank and open in the former, as he will be secret and pertinacious in the latter.

d

60

CC

je

ne

po

mı

gra

eit

cha

mi

and

deb

difg

mo

fent

to h

Mer

rife,

ferve

Ways

genc

œcon

parfit

canno pretty

man's

Th

It

T

He will, by his manners and address, endeavour, at least, to make his public adversaries his personal friends. He will flatter and engage the man, while he counterworks the Minister; and he will never alienate people's minds from him, by wrangling for points, either absolutely unattainable, or not worth attaining. He will make even a merit of giving up, what he could not or would not carry, and sell a trifle for a thousand times its value.

A foreign Minister, who is concerned in great affairs, must necessarily have spies in his pay; but he must not too easily credit their informations, which are never exactly true, often very false. His best spies will always be those whom he does not pay, but whom he has engaged in his service by his dexterity and address, and who think themselves nothing less than spies.

There is a certain jargon, which, in French, I should call un Persistage d'Affaires, that a foreign Minister ought to be persectly master of, and may use very advantageously at great entertainments, in mixed companies, and in all occasions where he must speak, and should say nothing. Well turned and well spoken, it seems to mean something, though in truth it means nothing. It is a kind of political badinage, which prevents or removes a thousand dissipations, to which a foreign Minister is exposed in mixed conversations.

If ever the Volto sciolto and the Pensieri stretti are necessary, they are so in these affairs. A grave, dark, dark, referved, and mysterious air, has fanum in cornu. An even, easy, unembarrassed one invites considence, and leaves no room for guesses and conjectures.

Both simulation and dissimulation are absolutely necessary for a foreign Minister; and yet they must stop short of salsehood and persidy: that middle point is the dissicult one; there ability consists. He must often seem pleased, when he is vexed; and grave, when he is pleased; but he must never say either: that would be salsehood, an indelible stain to character.

A foreign Minister should be a most exact ceconomist; an expence proportioned to his appointments and fortune is necessary: but, on the other hand, debt is inevitable ruin to him; it sinks him into disgrace at the Court where he resides, and into the most service and abject dependence on the Court that sent him. As he cannot resent ill usage, he is sure to have enough of it.

The Duc de Sully observes very justly, in his Memoirs, that nothing contributed more to his rise, than that prudent economy which he had observed from his youth; and by which he had always a sum of money before hand, in case of emergencies.

It is very difficult to fix the particular point of economy; the best error of the two is on the parsimonious side. That may be corrected, the other cannot.

The reputation of generosity is to be purchased pretty cheap; it does not depend so much upon a man's general expence, as it does upon his giving O 3 handsomely ogh in olitical and difofed in 23

ur.

nal

hile

ver

for orth

up, s II:

reat

at he hich

beft

pay,

exte-

thing

ch, I

oreign

d may

its, in e muf

d and grave, dark,

handsomely where it is proper to give at all. A man, for instance, who should give a servant four shillings, would pass for covetous, while he who gave him a crown would be reckoned generous: so that the disserence of those two opposite characters turns upon one shilling. A man's character, in that particular, depends a great deal upon the report of his own servants; a mere trise above common wages, makes their report favourable.

Take care always to form your establishment so much within your income, as to leave a sufficient sund for unexpected contingencies, and a prudent liberality. There is hardly a year, in any man's life, in which a small sum of ready money may not be employed to great advantage.

CCCCXXXV.

POLITICAL MAXIMS of the Cardinal DE RETZ, in his Memoirs; and the late Earl of CHESTERFIELD'S Remarks.

1. I L y a souvent de la solie à conjurer; mais il n'y a rien de pareil pour faire les gens sages dans la suite, au moins pour quelque tems. Comme le péril dans ces sortes d'affaires dure même après les occasions, l'on est prudent et circonspect dans les momens qui les suivent.

k

q

de

P

ni

lit

di tie

fai

fai

rép

Co

pai

* Upon the back of the original is written, in Mr. Stanhope's hand, "Excellent Maxims, but more calculated for the Meridia of France or Spain, than of England."

2. Un esprit médiocre, et susceptible par conséquent d'injustes désiances, est de tous les caracteres celui qui est le plus opposé à un bon chef de Parti; dont la qualité la plus souvent et la plus indispensablement nécessaire, est de supprimer en beaucoup d'occasions, et de cacher en toutes, les soupçons même les plus légitimes.

3. Rien n'anime et n'appuie plus un mouvement, que le ridicule de celui contre lequel on le fait.

4. Le secret n'est pas si rare qu'on le croit, entre des gens qui sont accoutumés à se mêler des grandes affaires.

5. Descendre jusqu'aux petits, est le plus sur moïen de s'égaler aux grands.

6. La mode, qui a du pouvoir en toutes choses, ne l'a si sensiblement en aucune, qu'à être bien ou mal à la Cour: il y a des tems ou la disgrace est une maniere de seu qui purisse toutes les mauvaises qualités, et qui illumine toutes les bonnes; il y a des tems ou il ne sied pas bien à un honnête homme d'être disgracié.

7. La souffrance, aux personnes d'un grand rang, tient lieu d'une grande vertu.

8. Il a une espéce de galimatias, que la pratique fait connoître quelquesois; mais que la spéculation ne fait jamais entendre.

9. Toutes les Puissances ne peuvent rien contre la réputation d'un homme qui se la conserve dans son Corps.

10. On est aussi souvent dupe par la désiance que par la consiance.

11. L'extrêmité du mal n'est jamais à son période, que quand ceux qui commandent ont perdu la honte;

0 4

parce

late

rdina

man.

lings,

im a

e dif.

upon

cular.

a fer-

nake

nt fo

fund

bera-

fe, in

e em-

dans me le rès les ns les nhope's Seridhn

. Un

parce que c'est justement le moment dans lequel ceux qui obéissent perdent le respect; et c'est dans ce même moment que l'on revient de la léthargie: mais par des convulsions.

12. Il y a un voile qui doit toujours couvrir tout ce que l'on peut dire, et tout ce que l'on peut croire du Droit des Peuples, et de celui des Rois, qui ne s'accordent jamais si bien ensemble que dans le silence.

13. Il y a des conjonctures dans lesquelles on ne peut plus faire que des fautes; mais la fortune ne met jamais les hommes dans cet état, qui est de tous le plus malheureux, et personne n'y tombe que ceux qui s'y précipitent par leur faute.

14. Il siéd plus mal à un Ministre de dire des sottifes, que d'en faire.

15. Les avis que l'on donne à un Ministre passent pour des crimes, toutes les sois qu'on ne lui est point agréable.

16. Auprès des Princes, il est aussi dangereux, et presqu'aussi criminel, de pouvoir le bien, que de vouloir le mal.

17. Il est bien plus naturel à la peur de consulter que de décider.

18. Cette circonstance paroit ridicule; mais elle est sondée. A Paris, dans les émotions populaires, les plus échaussés ne veulent pas, ce qu'ils apellent, se desbeurer.

19. La fléxibilité est de toutes les qualités la plus nécessaire pour le maniement des grandes affaires.

avec ceux qui en sont, que d'agir contre ceux qui y sont opposés.

21. Les plus grands dangers ont leurs charmes, pour

po

fp

n' tic

for qu

di

10 dé

de

da

de

m

p

fo

n

ĉ

21

I

P

n

.

pour peu que l'on apperçoive de gloire dans la perspective des mauvais succès. Les médiocres dangers n'ont que des horreurs, quand la perte de la réputation est attachée à la mauvaise fortune.

cur

CE

nais

t ce

du

-100

ne

ne

ous

CUX

fot-

ent

int

et ou-

lter

elle

res,

nt,

lus

vre

iy

es,

Juc

- 22. Les extrêmes sont toujours fâcheux. Mais ce sont des moiens sages quand ils sont nécessaires : ce qu'ils ont de consolant c'est qu'ils ne sont jamais médiocres, et qu'ils sont décisifs quand ils sont bons.
- 23. Il y a des conjonctures où la prudence même ordonne de ne consulter que le chapître des accidens.
- 24. Il n'y a rien dans le monde qui n'ait son moment décisif; et le chef d'œuvre de la bonne conduite, est de connoître et de prendre ce moment.
- 25. L'abomination joint au ridicule fait le plus dangereux et le plus irrémédiable de tous les composés.
- 26. Les gens foibles ne plient jamais quand ils le doivent.
- 27. Rien ne touche et n'émeut tant les peuples, et même les Compagnies, qui tiennent beaucoup du peuple, que la varieté des spectacles.
- 28. Les exemples du passé touchent sans comparaifon plus les hommes, que ceux de leur siecle: nous nous accoutumons à tout ce que nous vosons; et peutêtre que le Consulat du Cheval de Caligula ne nous auroit pas tant surpris que nous nous l'imaginons.
- 29. Les hommes foibles se laissent aller ordinairement au plus grand bruit.
- 30. Il ne faut jamais contester ce qu'on ne croit pas pouvoir obtenir.
- 31. Le moment où l'on reçoit les plus heureuses nouvelles, est justement celui où il faut redoubler son attention pour les petites.

05

32. Le

- 32. Le pouvoir dans les peuples est fâcheux, en et qu'il nous rend responsables de ce qu'ils sont malgré nous.
- 33. L'une des plus grandes incommodités des guerres civiles, est, qu'il faut encore plus d'application à ce que l'on ne doit pas dire à ses amis, qu'il ce que l'on doit faire contre ses ennemis.
- 34. Il n'y a point de qualité qui dépare tant me grand homme, que de n'être pas juste à prendre le moment décisif de la reputation. L'on ne le manque presque jamais que pour mieux prendre celui de la fortune; c'est en quoi l'on se trompe, pour l'ordinaire, doublement.
- 35. La vue la plus commune dans les imprudences, c'est celle que l'on a de la possibilité des ressources.
- 36. Toute Compagnie est peuple; ainsi tout y dépend des instans.
- 37. Tout ce qui paroit hazardeux, et qui pourtant ne l'est pas, est presque toujours sage.
- 38. Les gens irrésolus prennent toujours, avec sacilité, les ouvertures qui les ménent à deux chemins, et qui par conséquent ne les pressent pas d'opter.
- 39. Il n'y a point de petits pas dans les grandes affaires.
- 40. Il y a des tems où certaines gens ont toujoun raison.
- 41. Rien ne persuade tant les gens qui ont peu de sens que ce qu'ils n'entendent pas.
- 42. Il n'est pas sage de saire, dans le sactions, où l'on n'est que sur la désensive, ce qui n'est pas presse. Mais l'inquiétude des subalternes, est la chose la plus incommode dans ces rencontres; ils croient que, des qu'on n'agit pas, on est perdu.

43. Les

gr

le

A

fu

la

de

fe

P

43. Les chefs dans les factions n'en sont les maîtres, qu'autant qu'ils sçavent prévenir ou appaiser les murmures.

90 4S

algré

ppli-

qu'à

t m re le

agne

le la

aire.

ices,

25.

de

tant

acı-

, et des

מום

de

où

E.

us

ès

CS

44. Quand la fraïeur est venue à un certain point, elle produit les mêmes effets que le témérité.

45. Il est aussi nécessaire de choisir les mots dans les grandes affaires, qu'il est superflu de les choisir dans les petites.

46. Rien n'est plus rare ni plus difficile aux Minifires qu'un certain ménagement dans le calme qui fuit immédiatement les grandes tempêtes, parce que la flatterie y redouble, et que la défiance n'y est pas éteinte.

47. Il ne faut pas nous choquer si fort des fautes de ceux qui sont nos amis, que nous en donnions de l'avantage à ceux contre lesquels nous agissons.

48. Le talent d'infinuer est plus utile que celui de persuader, parce que l'on peut infinuer à tout le monde, et que l'on ne persuade presque jamais personne.

49. Dans les matiéres qui ne sont pas favorables par elles-mêmes, tout changement qui n'est pas nécessaire est pernicieux parce qu'il est odieux.

50. Il faut faire voir à ceux qui font naturellement foibles toutes fortes d'abîmes: parce que c'est le vrai moïen de les obliger de se jetter dans le premier chemin qu'on leur ouvre.

51. L'on doit hazarder le possible toutes les sois que l'on se sent en état de profiter même du manquement de succès.

52. Les hommes irrésolus se déterminent dissiclement pour les moiens, quoique même ils soient déterminés pour la fin. 53. C'est presque jeu sur, avec les hommes sourbes, de leur faire croire que l'on veut tromper ceux que l'on veut servir.

C

le

ti

di

UE

fin

ſp

m

gr

- vec les Princes, c'est que l'on est souvent obligé, par la considération de leur propre service, de leur donner des conseils dont on ne peut pas leur dire les véritables raisons.
- 55. Quand on se trouve obligé de faire un discours que l'on prévoit ne devoir pas agréer, l'on ne peut lui donner trop d'apparence de sincerité: parce que c'est l'unique moïen de l'adoucir.
- 56. On ne doit jamais se jouer avec la faveur : on ne la peut trop embrasser quand elle est véritable ; on ne la peut trop éloigner quand elle est fausse.
- 57. Il y a de l'inconvenient à s'engager sur des suppositions de ce que l'on croit impossible; et pourtant il n'y a rien de si commun.
- 58. La plûpart des hommes examinent moins les raisons de ce qu'on leur propose contre leur sentiment, que celles qui peuvent obliger celui qui les propose de s'en servir.
- 59. Tout ce qui est vuide, dans les tems de faction et d'intrigue, passe pour mystérieux dans les esprits de ceux qui ne sont pas accoutumés aux grandes affaires.
- 60. Il n'est jamais permis à un inférieur de s'égaler en paroles à celui à qui il doit du respect, quoi qu'il s'y égale dans l'action.
- 61. Tout homme que la fortune seule, par quelque accident, a fait homme public, devient presque toujours avec un peu de tems un particulier ridicule.
  - 62. La plus grande imperfection des hommes est, la complaisance complaisance qu'ils trouvent à se persuader que les autres ne sont point éxemts des désauts qu'ils, se reconnoissent à eux mêmes.

es,

ue

2.

ar

les

ın

lui

eft

on on ip-

les nt,

ose

on its af-

ler

l'il

uè

11-

ia

CE

- 63. Il n'y a que l'expérience qui puisse apprendre aux hommes à ne pas préférer ce qui les pique dans le present, à ce qui les doit toucher bien plus essentiellement dans l'avenir.
- 64. Il faut s'appliquer, avec soin, dans les grandes affaires encore plus que dans les autres, à se désendre du goût qu'on trouve pour la plaisanterie.
- 65. On ne peut affez peser les moindres mots, dans les grandes affaires.
- 66. Il n'y a que la continuation du bonheur qui fixe la plûpart des amitiés.
  - 67. Quiconque affemble le peuple, l'émeut,

TRANSLATION

Of Cardinal DE RETZ's Political Maxims.

- 1. IT is often madness to engage in a conspiracy; but nothing is so effectual to bring people afterwards to their senses, at least for a time. As in such undertakings, the danger subsists, even after the business is over; this obliges to be prudent and circumspect in the succeeding moments.
- 2. A middling understanding, being susceptible of unjust suspicions, is consequently, of all characters, the least sit to head a faction;—as the most indispensable qualification in such a Chief, is, to suppress, in many occasions, and to conceal in all, even the best-grounded suspicions.

302 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

- 3. Nothing animates and gives strength to a commotion, so much as the ridicule of him against whom it is raised.
- 4. Among people used to affairs of moment, seerecy is much less uncommon than is generally believed.
- 5. Descending to the Little, is the surest way of attaining to an equality with the Great.
- 6. Fashion, though powerful in all things, is not more so in any, than in being well or ill at Court. There are times, when disgrace is a kind of fire, that purifies all bad qualities, and illuminates every good one. There are others, in which the being out of favour is unbecoming a man of character.
- 7. Sufferings, in people of the first rank, supply the want of virtue.
- 8. There is a confused kind of jumble, which practice sometimes teaches; but is never to be understood by speculation.
- 9. The greatest Powers cannot injure a man's character, whose reputation is unblemished among his party.
- 10. We are as often duped by diffidence as by confidence.
- 11. The greatest evils are not arrived at their utmost period, until those who are in power have lost all sense of shame. At such a time, those who should obey, shake off all respect and subordination. Then is lethargic indolence roused; but roused by convalsions.
- 12. A veil ought always to be drawn over whatever may be faid or thought concerning the rights of

th

Cl

up

to 10

the

del

wi

left

the

to tho

if t

des

the

Wer

303 om-

om

fe-

be-

y of

urt.

that boo

s of

pply

rac-

tood

cha-

his

by nt-

lof

ould

hen

vul-

hat-ts of

the

- 13. There are, at times, fituations so very unfortunate, that whatever is undertaken must be wrong. Chance alone never throws people into such dilemmas; and they happen only to those who bring them upon themselves.
- 14. It is more unbecoming a Minister to fay, than to do filly things.
- 15. The advice given to a Minister, by an obnoxious person, is always thought bad.
- 16. It is as dangerous, and almost as criminal, with Princes, to have the power of doing good, as the will of doing evil.
- 17. Timorous minds are much more inclined to deliberate than to resolve.
- 18. It appears ridiculous to affert, but it is not the less true, that at Paris, during popular commotions, the most violent will not quit their homes past a stated hour.
- 19. Flexibility is the most requisite qualification for the management of great affairs.
- 20. It is more difficult for the member of a faction to live with those of his own party, than to act against those who oppose it.
- 21. The greatest dangers have their allurements, if the want of success is likely to be attended with a degree of glory. Middling dangers are horrid, when the loss of reputation is the inevitable consequence of ill success.

22. Violent

* This Maxim, as well as feveral others, evidently prove they were written by a man subject to despotic government.

304 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

22. Violent measures are always dangerous, but when necessary, may then be looked upon as wise. They have, however, the advantage of never being matter of indifferency; and, when well concerted, must be decisive.

23. There may be circumstances, in which even prudence directs us to trust intirely to chance.

24. Every thing in this world has its critical moment; and the height of good conduct confifts in knowing, and feizing it.

25. Profligacy, joined to ridicule, form the most abominable, and most dangerous of all characters.

26. Weak minds never yield when they ought.

27. Variety of fights have the greatest essect upon the mob, and also upon numerous assemblies, who, in many respects, resemble mob.

28. Examples taken from past times have infinitely more power over the minds of men, than any of the age in which they live. Whatever we see, grows familiar; and perhaps the Consulship of Caligula's Horse might not have astonished us so much as we are apt to imagine.

29. Weak minds are commonly overpowered by clamour.

30. We ought never to contend for what we are not likely to obtain.

31. The infant in which we receive the most favourable accounts is just that wherein we ought to redouble our vigilance, even in regard to the most trifling circumstances.

32. It is dangerous to have a known influence over the people; as thereby we become responsible even for what is done against our will.

33. One

TH

by 15 (

tur

rea

con

way

fan

preh

Upo

the i

actio

taini

ing o

they

3

3

MISCELLANEOUS PIECES. 305

33. One of the greatest difficulties in civil war is, that more art is required to know what should be concealed from our friends, than what ought to be done against our enemies.

at

e.

ng

d, en

10-

in

of

SOL

ho.

ely

the

fa-

a's

are

by

are

fa-

: 10

nof

TSVC

ven

Ope

- 34. Nothing lowers a great man so much, as not seizing the decisive moment of raising his reputation. This is seldom neglected, but with a view to fortune: by which mistake, it is not unusual to miss both.
- 35. The possibility of remedying imprudent actions, is commonly an inducement to commit them.
- 36. Every numerous affembly is mob; confequently every thing there depends upon instantaneous turns.
- 37. Whatever measure seems hazardous, and is in reality not so, is generally a wise one.
- 38. Irresolute minds always adopt with facility whatever measures can admit of different issues, and consequently do not require an absolute decision.
  - 39. In momentous-affairs, no step is indifferent.
- 40. There are times in which certain people are always in the right.
- 41. Nothing convinces persons of a weak underflanding so effectually, as what they do not comprehend.
- 42. When Factions are only upon the defensive, they ought never to do that which may be delayed. Upon such occasions, nothing is so troublesome as the restlessness of subalterns, who think a state of inaction, total destruction.
- 43. Those who head Factions have no way of maintaining their authority, but by preventing, or quieting discontent.

41. A

44. A certain degree of fear produces the fame effects as raftness.

P

W

it

to

P

0

C

1

- 45. In affairs of importance, the choice of words is of as much consequence, as it would be superfluous in those of little moment.
- violent florms, nothing is more difficult for Ministers, than to act properly; because, while flattery increases, suspicions are not yet subsided.

47. The faults of our friends ought never to anger us fo far, as to give an advantage to our enemies.

48. The talent of infinuation is more useful than that of persuasion; as every body is open to infinuation, but scarce any to persuasion.

49. In matters of a delicate nature, all unnecessary alterations are dangerous; because odious.

- 50. The best way to compel weak-minded people to adopt our opinion, is to frighten them from all others, by magnifying their danger.
- felves in a fituation to reap some advantage, ever even from the want of success.
- 52. Irresolute men are dissident in resolving upon the Means, even when they are determined upon the End.
- 53. It is almost a fure game, with crafty men, to make them believe we intend to deceive those when we mean to serve.
- 54. One of the greatest difficulties with Princes, is the being often obliged, in order to serve them, to give advice the true reasons of which we date not mention.
  - 55. The faying things which we foresee will not be pleasing, can only be softened by the greatest appearance of fincerity.

56. We ought never to trifle with favour. If real. we should hastily seize the advantage; if pretended, avoid the allurement.

- 57. It is very inconfequent to enter into engagements upon suppositions we think impossible, and yet it is very usual.
- 58. The generality of mankind pay lefs attention to arguments urged against their opinion, than to such as may engage the disputant to adopt their own.
- 59. In times of faction and intrigue, whatever appears inert, is reckoned mykerious by those who are not accustomed to affairs of moment.
- 60. It is never allowable in an inferior, to equal himself in words to a superior, although he may rival him in actions.
- 61. Every man whom chance alone has, by some accident, made a public character, bardly ever fails of becoming, in a fhort time, a ridiculous private one.
- 62. The greatest imperfection of men is, the complacency with which they are willing to think others not free from faults, of which they are themfelves confcious.
- 63. Experience only can teach men not to prefer what strikes them for the prefent moment, to what will have much greater weight with them hereafter.
- 64. In the management of important business, all turn to raillery must be more carefully avoided than in any other.
- 65. In momentous transactions, words cannot be fufficiently weighed.

66. The fame

rords UOBI

ceed Aers. in-

nger 25,

then 1000

Sur

-190

upoq

n, 10 rhom

es, R m, 10 not not be

308 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

66. The permanency of most friendships depends upon the continuity of good fortune.

67. Whoever assembles the multitude, will raise commotions.

CCCCXXXVI.

Lord CHESTERFIELD'S Remarks upon the foregoing MAXIMS.

T HAVE taken the trouble of extracting and col-I lecting, for your use, the foregoing Political Maxims of the Cardinal de Retz, in his Memoirs. They are not aphorisms of his invention, but the true and just observations of his own experience, in the course of great business. My own experience attests the truth of them all. Read them over with attention, as here above, and then read with the same attention, and tout de suite, the Memoirs; where you will find the facts and characters from whence those observations are drawn, or to which they are applied; and they will reciprocally help to fix each other in your mind. I hardly know any book fo necessary for a young man to read and remember. You will there find how great business is really carried on; very differently from what people, who have never been concerned in it, imagine. You will there see what Courts and Courtiers really are, and observe that they are neither fo good as they should be, nor so bad as they are thought by most people. The Court Poet, and the fullen, cloistered Pedant, are equally mistaken in their notions, or at least in the accounts they give ger a v yo pro

go

go

inj na un

par le

god bod juf

yo rea

bo the Au

wi an to

Th

ha

ma fal nds

aife

colical

pirs.

true

teffs

ten-

at-

you

ied:

r in

for

here

very what they

d as oet.

ifta-

they give

give us of them. You will observe the coolness in general, the perfidy in some cases, and the truth in a very few, of Court friendships. This will teach you the prudence of a general diftruft; and the imprudence of making no exception to that rule, upon good and tried grounds. You will fee the utility of good-breeding towards one's greatest enemies; and the high imprudence and folly, of either infulting or injurious expressions. You will find, in the Cardinal's own character, a strange, but by no means an ancommon mixture, of high and low, good and bad, parts and indifcretion. In the character of Monfieur le Duc d'Orleans, you may observe the model of weakness, irresolution, and fear, though with very good parts. In short you will, in every page of that book, see that strange, inconsistent creature, Man. just as he is. If you would know that period of history (and it is well worth knowing) correctly, after you have read the Cardinal's Memoirs, you should read those of Joly, and of Madame de Motteville: both which throw great light upon the first. By all those accounts put together it appears, that Anne of Austria (with great submission to a Crowned Head do I fay it) was a B-. She had spirit and courage without parts, devotion without common morality, and lewdness without tenderness either to justify or to dignify it. Her two fons were no more Lewis the Thirteenth's than they were mine; and if Buckingham had staid a little longer, she would probably have had another by him.

Cardinal Mazarin was a great knave, but no great man; much more cunning than able; scandalously false, and dirtily greedy. As for his enemy, Cardinal

nal de Retz, I can truly call him a man of great parts, but I cannot call him a great man. He never was fo much fo as in his retirement. The ladies had then a great, and have always had some share in State affairs in France: the spring and the streams of their politics have always been, and always will be, the interest of their present Lover, or their resent. ment against a discarded and persidious one. Money is their great object; of which they are extremely greedy, if it coincides with their arrangement with the Lover for the time being: but true glory, and public good, never enter into their heads. They are always governed by the man they love, and they always govern the man who loves them. He or she, who loves the most, is always governed by him or her who loves the leaft. Madame de Montbazon governed Monfieur de Beaufort, who was fond of hers whereas the was only proud of his rank and popularity. The Drudi for the time being always governed Madame and Mademoiselle de Chevreuse, and steered their politics. Madame de Longueville governed her brother the Prince de Conti, who was in love with her; but Marfillac, with whom the was in love, governed her. In all female politics, the head is certainly not the part that takes the lead; the true and fecret fpring lies lower and deeper. La Palatine, whom the Cardinal celebrates as the ablest and most sensible woman he ever met with, and who feems to have acted more fystematically and confequentially than any of them, starts aside however, and deviates from her plan, whenever the interests or the inclinations of La Vienville, her Lover, require it. I will add (though with great submission to a late friend of yours at Paris) that geth love tere brea

lutie

CC

first the short and Prin

othe the can fore gre

his

pro

E

tion

eat

vet

had

in

s of

be, entney nely

vith and

are

al-

fhe,

her ern-

hert

ula-

rned

ered

het

her

her.

part lies

linal

n be more

hem,

olan,

ieu-

with that

no

no woman ever yet either reasoned or acted long together consequentially; but some little thing, some love, some resentment, some present momentary interest, some supposed slight, or some humour, always breaks in upon and oversets their most prudent resolutions and schemes.

CCCCXXXVII.

of the Limitation, relative to Foreigners, in the Act of Settlement.

THE particular Limitation, relative to Foreigners, in the Act of Settlement, and now to be repealed, was marked out as peculiarly facred, by the first Parliament, and that no uncomplaisant one, of the late King, by enacting, that that Limitation should be inserted in all suture acts of Naturalization; and it was so, even in the act for naturalizing the Prince of Orange, the King's son-in-law.

But, it seems, Messieurs Prevot, Bouquet, and others, are now to receive a mark of distinction which the King's son-in-law could not then obtain: But, can the same indulgence, hereafter, ever be refused to foreign Protestant Princes, of the highest birth, and greatest merit, and, many of them, nearly related to his Majesty and the Royal Family; who may, very probably, prefer the British service to any other?

The poor military arguments, urged in justification of the Repeal of this most facred Law, are too trifling trifling to be the true ones, and too wretched to be feriously answered, unless by the unfortunate British Officers; who are hereby, in a manner, declared and enacted to be incapable of doing the duty of Captains, Majors, &c.

tal

110

mo

he

wh

Bri

irre

kn

lif

by till

Ho

adv

to wit

wil

enc

oth

Ge

one

the

of t fo I cip

fide

is fa

fuc

Was

whi

nec

but

(

Some other reason, therefore, must be sought for; and, perhaps, it is but too easily found.

May it not be periculum faciamus in anima vili? If this goes down, it shall be followed; some foreign Prince, of allowed merit, shall make the first application to the Crown, and to the Parliament, for the same favour which was shown to Messieurs Prevot, Bouquet, and Company. Can either of them, in common decency, refuse it? Besides that, perhaps a time may come, when Generals, and superior Officers, may be as much wanted in England, as great Captains and Majors are now wanted in America.

Great evils have always such trisling beginnings, to smooth the way for them insensibly; as Cardinal de Retz most justly observes, when he says, that he is persuaded, that the Romans were carried on by such shades and gradations of mischief and extravagancy, as not to have been much surprised or alarmed, when Caligula declared his intention of making his horse Consul. So that, by the natural progression of precedents, the next generation may probably see, and even without surprise or abhorrence, Foreigners commanding your troops, and voting the supplies for them in both Houses of Parliament.

As to the pretended utility of these foreign Heroes, it is impossible to answer such arguments seriously. What experience evinces the necessity? Cape Breton, the strongest place in America, was very irregularly taken,

be

tib

and

for;

2 If eign

lica-

the evot, a, in aps a

Offi-

great

ca. ings,

dinal

he is fach

ancy,

when horse

f pre-

comes for

eroes,

oully.

reton,

ularly

taken,

taken, in the last war, by our irregular American troops. Sir William Johnson lately beat, and took most irregularly, the regular General Dieskau, at the head of his regular forces; and General Braddock, who was most judiciously selected out of the whole British army, to be our Scipio Americanus, was very irregularly destroyed, by unseen, and to this day unknown enemies.

How will these foreign Heroes agree with the English Officers of the same corps, who are, in a manner, by Act of Parliament, declared unsit for their business, till instructed in it by the great foreign masters of Homicide. Will they not even be more inclined to advise, than to obey their Colonel; to interpret, than to execute his orders? Will they co-operate properly with our American troops and Officers, whom they will certainly look upon, and treat, as an inexperienced and undisciplined rabble? Can it possibly be otherwise? or, can it be wondered at, when those Gentlemen know, that they are appointed Officers by one Act of Parliament, and at the expence of another, the most facred of the statute-book?

O! but there is to be but one half of the Officers, of this thundering Legion, who are to be Foreigners: so much the worse; for then, according to the principle laid down, it can be but half disciplined. Besides, the less the object, to which a very great object is sacrificed, the more absurd, and the more suspicious such a facrifice becomes. At first, this whole legion was to consist of all Foreigners, Field-officers and all; which, upon the principle of the absolute utility and necessity of foreign Officers, was much more rational; but, thus mitigated, as it is called, is a thousand Vol. IV.

314 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

why truly, the facred Act of Settlement is to be repealed, and in the tenderest part, for the sake of some foreign Captains and Majors, who are to be commanded by British superior Officers, who, by this Act of Parliament, are supposed not to know their trade.

One has heard, (but one hears a thousand false reports) that this absurd scheme was, some time ago, quashed by his Majesty's own prudence and goodness; and, from the rightness of the thing, I am inclined to believe that it is true: and I am fure I will not suppose, that ever that might be among the reasons for resuming it in this shape, and forcing it down the throats of the reluctant Nation: but this is certain. that it was once dropped, and at some expence too. The foreign Heroes were contented with Money inflead of Laurels, and were going away about their own business; but, perhaps, a condescension to the unanimous wishes of the whole people of England, at least, was looked upon as a dangerous precedent, and the repeal of the Act of Settlement as an useful one. But however, I will have candour enough to believe, that this was merely an absurd, wrong-headed meafure; for, if I did not, I must think it the wickedes that ever was pushed.

CCCCXXXVIII.

you

of a

tur

reig

tha

lay the

nec

Wo

may eith

of y

For,

or you and you the f Bulli dize,

T

CCCCXXXVIII.

AXIOMS IN TRADE.

To buy your materials as cheap, and to fell your manufactures as dear as you can.

To ease the manufacturers, as much as possible, of all taxes and burthens.

To lay small or no duties upon your own manufactures exported, and to lay high duties upon all soreign manufactures imported.

To lay small or no duties upon foreign materials, that are necessary for your own manufactures; but to lay very high duties upon, or rather totally prohibit, the exportation of such of your own materials as are necessary for the manufactures of other countries; as Wool, Fuller's-earth, &c.

To keep the interest of money low, that people may place their money in trade.

Not to imagine (as people commonly do) that it is either prudent or possible to prohibit the exportation of your gold and silver, whether coined or uncoined. For, if the balance of trade be against you, that is, if you buy more than you sell, you must necessarily make up that difference in money; and your Bullion or your Coin, which are in effect the same thing, must and will be exported, in spite of all laws. But if you sell more than you buy, then foreigners must do the same by you, and make up their desiciency in Bullion or Coin. Gold and silver are but merchandize, as well as Cloth or Linen: and that nation that buys

P 2

WIII.

1

ne-

me.

re-

go,

fs;

ned

not ons

the

ain,

too.

in-heir

the

d, at

and one.

ieve,

mea-

edek

316 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

buys the leaft, and fells the most, must always have the most money

A free trade is always carried on with more advantage to the public, than an exclusive one by a company. But the particular circumstances of some trades may sometimes require a joint stock and exclusive privileges.

All monopolies are destructive to trade.

To get, as much as possible, the advantages of manusacturing and freight.

To contrive to underfell other nations, in foreign markets.

CCCCXXXIX.

To the KING's most Excellent MAJESTY,
The humble PETITION of PHILIP Earl of CHESTERFIELD, Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter.

SHEWETH,

THAT your Petitioner, being rendered, by deafness, as useless and infignificant as most of his equals and cotemporaries are by nature, hopes, in common with them, to share your Majesty's Royal favour and bounty; whereby he may be enabled either to save, or spend, as he shall think proper, more than he can do at present.

That your Petitioner having had the honour of ferving your Majesty in several very lucrative employments, seems thereby entitled to a lucrative retrest fro is,

lea

an at if dor

wil

afte

to o

far und and que

clin nies pen-

difti rewa

Civi

state cuat the s

whic

from

from business, and to enjoy otium cum dignitate; that is, leisure and a large pension.

ve

in-

m-

des

ori-

ma-

ign

Y, rl of oble

d, by nost of

es, in val fa-

either

e than

our of n ploy-

retreat

Your Petitioner humbly presumes, that he has, at least, a common claim to such a pension: he has a vote in the most august affembly in the world; he has an estate that puts him above wanting it; but he has, at the same time (though he says it) an elevation of sentiment, that makes him not only desire, but (pardon, dread Sir, an expression you are used to) insist upon it.

That your Petitioner is little apt, and always unwilling, to speak advantageously of himself; but as, after all, some justice is due to one's-self, as well as to others, he begs leave to represent, That his loyalty to your Majesty has always been unshaken, even in the worst of times; That, particularly, in the late unnatural rebellion, when the Pretender advanced a far as Derby, at the head of, at least, three thousand undisciplined men, the flower of the Scottish Nobility and Gentry, your Petitioner did not join him, as unquestionably he might have done, had he been so inclined: but, on the contrary, raifed fixteen companies, of one hundred men each, at the public expence, in support of your Majesty's undoubted right to the Imperial Crown of these Realms; which distinguished proof of his loyalty is, to this hour, unrewarded.

Your Majesty's Petitioner is well aware, that your Civil List must necessary be in a low and languid state, after the various, frequent, and profuse evacuations which it has of late years undergone; but, at the same time, he presumes to hope, that this argument, which seems not to have been made use of against any other person whatsoever, shall not, in this single case, be urged against him; and the less so, as he has good reasons to believe, that the desciencies of the Pension fund are by no means the last that will be made good by Parliament.

Your Petitioner begs leave to observe, That a small Tension is disgraceful and opprobrious, as it intimates a shameful necessity on one part, and a degrading fort of charity on the other: but that a great one implies dignity and affluence on one side; on the other regard and esteem; which, doubtless, your Majesty must entertain in the highest degree, for those great personages whose respectable names stand upon your Eleemosynary list. Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly persuades himself, upon this principle, that less than three thousand pounds a year will not be proposed to him: if made up gold the more agreeable; if for life the more marketable.

Your Petitioner persuades himself, that your Majesty will not suspect this his humble application to proceed from any mean, interested motive, of which he has always had the utmost abhorrence. No, Sir, he confesses his own weakness; Honour alone is his object; Honour is his passion; Honour is dearer to him than life. To Honour he has always sacrificed all other considerations; and upon this generous principle, singly, he now solicits that honour, which, in the most shining times, distinguished the greatest men of Greece; who were fed at the expence of the public.

Upon this Honour, so sacred to him as a Peer, so tender to him as a Man, he most solemnly assures your Majesty, that, in case you shall be pleased to grant

an

VIS

eve

fho

ref

cla

po

yo

Wa

Co

fold

ele

the

. (

fo i dec

cil the pre

of I

Wri

grant him this his humble request, he will gratefully and honourably support, and promote with zeal and vigour, the worst measure that the worst Minister can ever suggest to your Majesty: but, on the other hand, should he be singled out, marked, and branded by a refusal, he thinks himself obliged in Honour to declare, that he will, to the utmost of his power, oppose the best and wifest measures that your Majesty yourself can ever distate.

And your Majesty's Petitioner shall ever pray.

CCCCXL.

A FRAGMENT.

Chapter of the Garter is to be held at St. A James's next Friday; in which Prince Edward, the Prince of Orange, the Earls of Lincoln, Winchelsea, and Cardigan, are to be elected Knights Companions of the Order of the Garter. Though folely nominated by the Crown, they are faid to be elected; because there is a pretended election. the Knights are fummoned to attend the Sovereign at a Chapter, to be held on fuch a day, in order to elect so many new Knights into the vacant Stalls of the deceased ones; accordingly they meet in the Council Chamber, where they all fit down according to their seniority, at a long table, where the Sovereign presides. There every Knight pretends to write a list of those for whom he intends to vote; and, in effect, writes down nine names, fuch as he thinks proper taking cafe, good fion-

P 4

boog

mall ates fort

plies rejefty

your um-

les proble;

Maon to hich Sir, s his er to ficed erous hich, eatest

er, fo

y

y

21

OU

ex

fit

m lil

as

an

m

to

re

for

mo

ne

inc

ad

W

taking care, however, to infert the names of those who are really to be elected; then the Bishop of Sa. lisbury, who is always the Chancellor of the Order. goes round the table, and takes the paper of each Knight, pretends to look into them, and then de. clares the majority of votes to be for those persons who were nominated by the Crown. Upon this declaration, two of the old Knights go into the outward room, where the new ones are attending, and introduce them, one after another, according to their ranks. The new Knight kneels down before the King, who puts the riband about his neck; then he turns to the Prince of Wales, or, in his absence, to the oldest Knight, who puts the Garter about his leg. This is the ceremony of the Chapter: that of the Installation, which is always performed in St. George's Chapel at Windsor, completes the whole thing: for till then the new Knights cannot wear the Star, unless by a particular dispensation from the Sovereign, which is very feldom granted. All ceremonies are in themselves very filly things; but yet a man of the world should know them. They are the outworks of Manners and Decency, which would be too often broken in upon, if it were not for that defence, which keeps the enemy at a proper distance. It is for that reason that I always treat fools and coxcombs with great ceremony ; true good-breeding not being a fufficient barrier against them. The knowledge of the world teaches one to deal with different people differently, and according as characters and fituations require. The versatile ingenium is a most essential point; and a man must be broke to it while he is young.

young. Have it always in your thoughts, as I have you in mine. Adieu.

2-

ch

e-

200 deutand

neir the

he .

, to

leg.

In-

ge's

for un-

ign,

re in

f the

ks of often

which

r that

with a fuf-

of the differ-

ns re-

Tential

he is young.

P. S. This moment I receive your letter of the 15th N. S. with which I am very well pleased: it informs me, and, what I like still better, it shows me that you are informed.

CCCCXLI.

A FRAGMENT.

COUR riding, fencing, and dancing, constantly at the Academy, will, I hope, lengthen you out a little; therefore, pray take a great deal of those exercises: for I would very fain have you be at least five feet eight inches high, as Mr. Harte once wrote me word that he hoped you would. Mr. Pelham likewise told me, that you speak German and French as fluently and correctly as a Saxon or a Parifian. I am very glad of both: take care not to forget the former; there is no danger of your forgetting the latter. As I both thank and applaud you for having, hitherto, employed yourself so well abroad, I must again repeat to you, that the manner in which you shall now employ it at Paris, will be finally decifive of your fortune, figure, and character in the world, and confequently of my effeem and kindness. Eight or nine months determine the whole; which whole is very near compleat. It consists of this only: to retain and increase the learning you have already acquired : to add to it the still more useful knowledge of the World; and to adorn both, with the Manners, the

P

Address.

322 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

Address, the Air, and the Graces of a Man of Fashion. Without the last, I will say of your youth and your knowledge, what Horace says to Venus;

Parum comis sine te Juventas, Mercuriusque.

The two great subjects of conversation now at Paris are, the dispute between the Crown and the Clergy, and between the Crown and the States of Brittany: inform yourself thoroughly of both; which will let you into the most material parts of the French history and constitution. There are four Letters printed, and very well written, against the pretended rights and immunities of the Clergy; to which there is an Anfwer, very well written too, in defence of those immunities. Read them both with attention; and also all representations, memorials, and whatever shall appear for or against the claims of the States of Brittany. I dare fay, that ninety-nine in a hundred, of the English at Paris, do not give themselves the trouble of inquiring into those disputes; but content themselves with faying, " that there is a con-" founded buftle and rout between the King and the " Priests, and between the King and the States of " Brittany; but that, for their parts, they do not " trouble their heads about them; fight Dog, fight "Bear." But with submission to them, these are objects worthy the attention and inquiries of a man of fense and bufiness.

Adieu, my dear child! Yours tenderly.

L

m

to

po

m

m

D

d'

Un

ch

de

pr

lai

m

de

fer

po pa

eff qu uf of

h

ris

y,

y:

let

гу

nd nd

n-

m.

all

ap-

rit-

, of the

on-

on-

of

not ght

are

man

We have been favoured with the following Letters, written by the late EARL of CHESTERFIELD to different persons.

CCCCXLII.

LETTRE de Recommandation, en faveur de Madame Cleland, addressée à Madame de Tencin.

Londres, ce 20 Aouft, V. S.

Combattu par des mouvemens bien différents, j'ai long-tems ballancé, avant que d'oser me déterminer, à vous envoier cette lettre. Je sentois toute l'indiscrétion d'une telle démarche, et à quel point c'étoit abuser de la bonté que vous avez eu pour moi, pendant mon séjour à Paris, que de vous la redemander pour un autre: mais sollicité vivement par une Dame que son mérite met à l'abri des resus, et portè, d'ailleurs, à prositer du moindre prétexte pour rappeller un souvenir qui m'est si précieux, que le vôtre; le penchant (comme il arrive presque toujours) a triomphé de la discrétion; et je satisfais en même tems à mes propres inclinations et aux instances de Madame Cleland, qui aura l'honneur de vous rendre cette lettre.

Je sçais par expérience, Madame (car j'en suis moimême un exemple) que ce n'est pas la premiere affaire de la sorte, à laquelle vôtre réputation, qui ne se renferme point dans les bornes de la France, vous a exposée: mais je me slatte, aussi, que vous ne la trouverez pas la plus désagréable. Un mérite supérieur, un esprit juste, délicat, orné par la lecture de tout ce qu'il y a de bon dans toutes les langues, et un grand usage du monde, qui ont acquis à Madame Cleland

P 6

l'cftime

l'estime et la considération de tout ce qu'il y a d'hon nêtes gens icy, me rassurent sur la liberté, que je prends, de vous la recommander; et me persuadent même que vous ne m'en sçaurez pas mauvais gré.

Si vous me demandez, par hasard, pourquoi elle m'a choisi pour son introducteur chez vous, et pourquoi elle a crû, que je m'étois acquis ce droit là; je vous dirai naturellement, que c'est moi, qui en suis cause. En cela j'ai suivi l'exemple de la plupart des voïageurs, qui, à leur retour, se sont valoir chez eux, par leurs prétendues liaisons avec ce qu'il y a de plus distingué, chez les autres. Les Rois, les Princes, et les Ministres les ont toujours comblé de leurs grâces. Et moïennant ce saux étalage d'honneurs qu'ils n'ont point recû, ils acquiérrent une considération qu'ils ne méritent point.

J'ai vanté vos bontés pour moi; je les ai exagérées même, s'il étoit possible; et ensin, pour ne vous rien cacher, ma vanité a poussé l'effronterie au point même de me donner pour vôtre ami favori, et ensant de la maison. Quand Madame Cleland m'a pris au mot, et m'a dit; " Je vais bientôt en France; je n'y am- bitionne rien tant, que l'honneur de connoître Ma- dame de Tencin; vous qui êtes si bien là, il ne vous coutera rien de me donner une lettre pour elle."

Le cas étoit embarassant: car, après ce que j'avois dit, un refus auroit été trop choquant à Madame Cleland, et l'aveu, que je n'étois pas en droit de le saire, trop humiliant pour mon amour propre. Si bien que je me suis trouvé réduit à risquer le pacquet, et je crois même que je l'aurois sait, si je n'avois pas en l'honneur de vous connoître du tout, plûtot que de me donner le démenti sur un article si sensible.

Aïant

fi

e

di

CE

et

21

fe et

fu

L

and

ıt

le

1-je

115 les

IX,

lus

les

Et

ont

ne

rées

rien

ême e la

not,

am-

Mavous

." avois

lame

de le bien

et je

as en

de me

Aiant

Aïant donc franchi le pas; je voudrois bien en profiter, pour vous exprimer les sentimens de reconnoisfance que j'ai, et que j'aurai toujours des bontés que vous m'avez temoigné à Paris; je voudrois austi vous exprimer tout ce que je pense des qualités qui distinguent votre cœur et votre esprit, de tous les autres : mais cela me méneroit également au delà des bornes d'une lettre, et au dessus de mes forces.

Je souhaitterois que Monsieur de Fontenelle voulut bien s'en charger pour moi. Sur cet article, je puis dire, sans vanité, que nous pensons de même; avec cette différence, qu'il vous le diroit avec cet esprit. cette délicatesse, et cette élégance, qui lui sont propres, et seules convenables au sujet.

Permettez donc, Madame, que destitué de tous ces avantages de l'esprit, je vous assure simplement des sentimens de mon cœur, de l'estime, de la vénération, et de l'attachement respectueux, avec lequel je serai toute ma vie, Madame, Votre, &c.

Je crois que vous me pardonnerez bien, si je vous supplie de faire mes complimens à Monsieur de Fontenelle.

TRANSLATION.

LETTER of Recommendation, in favour of Mrs. Cleland, to Madame de Tencin.

London, August the 20th, O. S. GITATED by various thoughts, I have long Le been in suspence, before I durst resolve to send . I felt all the indifcretion of fuch a step, and how much it would be trespassing upon the goodness

ness I had experienced from you during my stay at Paris, to require the fame for another. A lady, whose merit secures her from a refusal, has entreated me in the most pressing manner, and my own inclinations have concurred, to make use of the first opportunity. to recall a remembrance which will always give me pleasure; so that inclination having (as it generally happens) overpowered discretion, my own wishes, and Mrs. Cleland's defires will both be gratified, by her having the honour of prefenting this letter to you.

VO

the

CO

to dre

an

me

"

fai

ful

bu

fuc

rui

if |

hav

a t bel

gra

go

We

tho

YOU

WO

ind

Fo

the

I know, Madam, by experience, and am myfelfa proof, that this is not the first affair of that kind, which your reputation, not confined within the limits of France, has brought upon you; but I flatter my. felf that you will not look upon this as the most difagreeable. Superior merit, exquisite and refined sense, adorned by the knowledge of the best authors in every language, and a thorough usage of the world, have acquired Mrs. Cleland the esteem and consideration of all people of most merit here. These motives encourage me to take the liberty of recommending her to you, and even persuade me that you will not be offended at it.

If, by chance, you should ask why this lady has made choice of me to be her introductor towards you, and how she came to believe that I had any such right; I will candidly own, that I myfelf have been the cause of it: and, in this respect, I have followed the example of most travellers; who, at their return to their own country, endeavour to raise their reputation, by boafting of imaginary connections with the most distinguished people abroad. Kings, Princes, and ministers, have always loaded them with fayours: at

fe

in.

ns.

y,

ne

lly

ná

190

fa

nd,

ils

ny-

ifa-

ife,

ery

ave

tion

en-

her

t be has

you,

fuch

been

wed

turn

uta-

the nces,

fa-

curs:

vours: in consequence of those boasted honours, which they never received, they often acquire a degree of consideration which they do not deserve.

I have boasted of your goodness to me; I have even, if possible, exaggerated it; and, in short (not to conceal any thing from you) Vanity has even drove me to declare that I was your favourite friend, and domesticated in your house. Mrs. Cleland immediately seized this opportunity to say; "I am going to France soon; I wish for nothing so much, as to have the honour of knowing Madame de Tencin: since you are so much connected, you can easily give me a letter for her."

This was an intricate affair; for after what I had faid, Mrs. Cleland might have been shocked by a refusal, and my self-love would have been too cruelly hurt, if I had owned that I had no right to do any such thing. So that I find myself under a necessity of running all hazards; and I really believe, that even if I had not been known to you at all, I should still have done it, rather than have confessed so mortifying a thing.

As the first step is now taken, I wish to make the best use of it, by expressing to you the sentiments of gratitude which I have, and ever shall retain, for your goodness to me, during my stay at Paris. I wish it were in my power to tell you also, what I think of those persections, which distinguish your heart and your mind so eminently from all others; but this would carry me beyond the bounds of a letter, and is, indeed, more than I know how to express. Mr. de Fontenelle might undertake this for me; for, to say the truth, I know that our opinions upon that subject coincide; coincide; with this difference only, that he would express those sentiments with all that energy, delicacy. and elegancy, fo peculiar to him, and fo very proper for the subject.

Permit me then, Madam, though destitute of all those advantages of mind, to assure you simply of the fentiments of my heart; and of the esteem, veneration, and respectful attachment with which I shall Yours, &c. always remain

P. S. I am persuaded that you will forgive my troubling you to make my compliments to Mr. de Fontenelle.

CCCCXLIII.

E T E R.

Londres, ce 1 Janvier, V. S.

MADAME,

E ne suis pas diseur de bonne avanture, ains au contraire; car je vous annonce que ces quatre billets, que j'ai chois avec tant d'attention, et que j'estimois, l'un portant l'autre, à vingt mille piéces au moins, se sont avisés d'être tous blancs.

Je ne me console de vôtre malheur que par les belles réflexions qu'il me fait faire, et par la morale utile que j'en tire, pour le reste de mes jours .- Oui! Je vois bien, à present, que toute la prudence humaine, les mesures les plus sages, et les projets les mieux concertés sont frivoles, si la Fortune, cette Divinité inconstante, bisarre et feminine, n'est pas d'humeur à les favoriser.

n'

m

ch

20 fic

ga

2p

et de de

bo toi

pli do

pri

log

de

tiv

PO

un

plu

jet lan

ray

y

fen

avoriser. Car que pouvoit-on faire de plus que je n'ai fait, et qu'en preuvoit-il arriver de moins ?

Se donnera-t'on, après cela, du mouvement, formera-t'on des plans, et s'inquiétera-t'on, pour les choses de ce monde ? J'ose dire, que si ces reflexions. auffi judicieuses que nouvelles, font la même impresfion fur vôtre esprit qu'elles ont fait sur le mien, elles vous vaudront plus, que tout ce que vous auriez pû gagner dans la lotterie.

X-

y, er

all

of

ne-

all

my

de

S.

3 au

atre

que

8 20

elles

utile

! ]e ine,

con-

é in-àles rifer.

Vous êtes bien querelleuse, Madame; jusqu'à m'accorder un talent, que je na'i pas, pour pouvoir, après, me reprocher de ne le pas emploier avec vous ; et je m'épuise, dites vous, en bon ton, avec Madame de Monconseil. Quelle accusation injuste, et denuée de toute vraisemblance! Un Milord Anglois avec le bon ton! Ce sont deux choses absolument contradictoires : ou, pour m'expliquer plus clairement, et simplifier mon idée; ce font deux Etres hétérogenes, dont l'existence de l'un implique, nécéssairement, la privation de l'autre.

Me voici donc justifié dans toutes les formes de la logique; et si vous n'en êtes pas contente, Madame de Monconseil, qui a en main mes pieces justificatives, pourra vous en convaincre. Au reste; si j'en possédois tant soit peu, ce nouvel an me fourniroit une belle occasion de l'étaler. Et quoique depuis plus de cinq mille ans, toute la terre ait traité ce sujet; je vous dirois quelque chose de nouveau, de galant, et d'obscur, dont on ne s'est jamais avisé auparavant : vôtre mérite, et les fentimens de mon cœur, y seroient alembiqués, jusqu'à la plus fine quintesfence.

TRANSLATION.

London, January the 1st, O. S.

W ba

fh to

pl

te

fa

to

M

vi

ye

al

th

w

th

to

ce

la

de

m

MADAM,

T HAVE no fkill in fortune-telling: for I must acquaint you, that the four lottery-tickets I had chosen with so much care, and valued one with an. other at the rate of (at least) twenty thousand pounds, are all come out blanks.

My only confolation in this misfortune is, the fine reflections which it occasions, and the most useful Moral drawn from it, for the rest of my days. Now, I plainly fee that all human prudence, the wifeft projects, and the best-concerted schemes, are vain and frivolous; if Fortune, that capricious, inconfiant, and feminine Deity, is not disposed to favour them: for what more could have been done than I did, and what less could have happened?

After fuch a reverse; shall we ever take pains, form projects, or be uneasy concerning worldly events? I will venture to fay, that if fuch reflections, equally judicious as new, make the same impression upon your mind, that they do upon mine, they will be more valuable, than all you could have won in the Lottery.

Surely, Madam, you must have a great inclination to quarrel, fince you allow me to be in possession of a talent which I really have not; in order to reproach me with not availing myself of it towards you, while, fay you, "I exhaust that talent of saying agreeable " things in favour of Madame de Monconfeil." What

What an unjust accusation, and how void of all probability! An English Lord, and say things in fashionable French phrases! This is quite contradictory; or, to explain myself more clearly, and to simplify my idea, I must answer, that they are two heterogeneous Beings; the existence of the one necessarily implying the non-existence of the other.

. S.

ac-

had an-

ids,

fine

eful

OW,

-010

and

unt,

m:

pas

ins,

ion,

will the

ion

of ach

ile,

ble

il."

hat

Now I think my justification complete, according to all the rules of logic; but if that does not suffice, Madame de Monconseil has it in her power to convince you, by producing my letters.

Was I possessed of the talent you suppose, the Newyear would be a proper occasion to display it on; and, although that subject has been treated by the whole world for above five thousand years, yet I should then say something new, gallant, and unintelligible, which never before was thought of. Your merit, and the sentiments of my heart, would then be distilled to the most refined quintessence.

CCCCXLIV.

LETTER

A Londres, ce 9<sup>me</sup> Fevrier, O. S. A DIEU donc toute coquetterie, de part et d'autre, et vive la vrai et folide amitié! Heureux ceux qui peuvent s'y attendre: c'est le gros lot, dans la lotterie du monde, contre lequel il y a des millions de billets blancs.

S'il pouvoit y avoir quelque chose de flatteur dans mon amitié; je dirois, que nous pourrions nous flatter que la nôtre seroit également vraie et durable: puisqu'elle est à l'abri de tous ces petits incidens, qui brouillent la plûpart des autres. D'abord, nous sommes de différent sexe, article affez important; et qui nous garantit de ces défiances et de ces rivalités. fur les objets les plus fenfibles, et contre lesquels la plus belle amitié du monde ne tient point. En fecond lieu; il n'entre point d'amour dans nôtre fait: qui, quoique, à la verité, il donne un grand feu à l'amitié, pendant un certain tems, la flamme de l'un venant à s'éteindre, on voit bientôt les cendres de l'autre. Et enfin (ce qui me regarde uniquement) nous ne nous voions pas trop. Vous ne me connoisses que par mon bon côté; et vous ne voiez pas ces moments de langueur, d'humeur, et de chagrin, qui causent, si souvent, le dégout ou le repentir des liaisons qu'on a formé, et qui font, qu'on se dit à soimême; L'auroit-on crû? Qui l'auroit dit? Comme on peut se tromper aux dehors? Et la perspective, dans laquelle vous me voiez, m'est si favorable, qu'elle me console un peu della lontananza, ou je suis obligé de vous chercher.

Une caillette, a beaux sentimens, critiqueroit impitoïablement ceux-ci comme tres indélicats; mais en sont-ils moins naturels pour cela? Et ne sommes nous pas, pour la plûpart, redevables de nos vertus à des situations et des circonstances un peu fortuites? Au moins j'ai assez d'humilité pour le croire; et (s je voulois dire toute la verité) assez d'expérience, de moi-même, pour le sçavoir. En tous cas; tel que je suis, je vous suis acquis, et vous voiez que je suis de trop bonne foi pour vous surfaire dans le prix de l'acquifition que vous avez faite.

Vous

1 et c fau

ou

che

fero

vou

con

par

avo

ture

ver

fon

dan

соп

соп

qui peu

ces

cha

fes

nou

per

TOU

ces

fave

VOU

par

que

mai

Dez

S

I

le:

qui Ous

; et

tés, s la

fe-

ait:

eu à l'un

de

ent)

ffez

mo-qui des

foi-

nme

ive,

ble.

fuis

im-

s en

nous

des

Au

fi je

, de

fuis

x de

Vous

Vous avez beau faire les honneurs de vôtre pais, et désavouer vôtre propriété exclusive des Graces; il faut convenir, pourtant, que la France est leur séjour, ou plûtot leur pais natal. Si elles pouvoient se facher contre vous, dont il y a peu d'apparance; elles seroient piquées, au point de vous quitter, de ce que vous les envoiez promener dans un pais, ou elles ne connoissent, ni ne sont connues de personne : et fi par hasard je les connoissois, ce ne seroit que pour les avoir vûes fi fouvent chez vous.

Il est bien sur que les Graces sont un don de la nature, qu'on ne peut pas acquérir; l'art en peut relever l'éclat, mais il faut que la nature ait donné le On voit cela en tout. Combien de gens ne dansent-ils pas parfaitement bien, mais sans grace; comme il y en a qui dansent très mal avec beaucoup: combien trouvé-t'-on d'esprits vigoureux et délicats, qui instruits et ornés par tout ce que l'art et l'étude peuvent faire, ne plaisent pourtant guére, faute de ces graces naturelles, qui ne s'acquiérent point: chaque pais a ses talens, austi bien que ses fruits et ses denrées particulieres. Nous pensons creux, et nous aprofondissons; les Italiens pensent baut, et se perdent dans les nues: vous tenez le milieu; on vous voit, on vous fuit, on vous aime.

Servez vous, Madame, de tout ce que cet esprit et ces graces, que je vous connois, peuvent faire en ma faveur, et dites, je vous en supplie, tout ce qu'elles vous suggéreront, à Monsieur de Matignon, de ma part. Mon cœur ne vous désavouera pas sur tout ce que vous pourrez lui dire de plus fort, à propos du mariage de Mademoiselle sa fille : mais ne vous bornez pas à ce seul article, car il n'y en a pas un, au monde, monde, qui peut le regarder, auquel je ne prendrois pas également part. Ce seroit abuser de sa bonté que de lui écrire moi-même : une messagére comme vous me fera bien plus d'honneur, et à lui plus de Adieu, Madame. Je rougis de la longueur de ma lettre.

TRANSLATION.

London, February the 9th, O. S.

DIEU then to all coquetry, on both sides, and prosperity to real and solid friendship! In this lottery of the world, happy are those who can obtain that greatest prize, to which there are millions of blanks. If any thing could be pleasing in my friendship. I would urge that we have reason to flatter ourfelves, that with us friendship may be equally true and permanent, fince ours will be unattended by all shose little incidents, which are the bane of others. We are of different fexes; an important article, and fuch a one as prevents those suspicions, and sentiments of rivalship, which the finest friendships that ever were formed cannot withstand. Secondly, we are free from love, which, though it may, during a time, add warmth to friendship; yet when the flames of the one begin to extinguish, you soon perceive the ashes of the other. And lastly (but this relates only to myfelf) we do not fee one another too frequently. You view me in the best light, and do not perceive those moments of languor, caprice, or ill-humour, which are so generally the occasion of dislike, cause

OF di

fa

be yo

tin inc

mo

cur

hav

tru

fuci

am

mer

cour

Gra

abod

impi were

you,

into

Know know havin

that t

their

the fa

who c

I

us to repent of the connections we have formed, and are the motives that occasion our faying, Who would have thought it? Who could have imagined it? How one may be deceived by outward appearances! The distant point from which you view me, is fo very favourable, that it affords me some consolation for being under the necessity of remaining so far from you.

A trifling woman, with pretentions to refined fentiments, would criticise these unmercifully, as very indelicate; but are they the less natural? And are not most of us beholden for our virtue to particular circumstances, or to accidental causes? As for me, I have humility to own, and (were I to tell the whole truth) felf-experience to confirm it. At all events, fuch as I am, you may dispose of me; and you see I am too ingenuous to deceive you, by enhancing the merits of the person who is entirely yours.

S.

es,

In

ob-

s of

nd-

our-rue

all

ers.

and enti-

that

. WE

ing a

ames

re the only

ently.

rceive

mour,

cause

113

It is in vain you strive to do the honours of your country, by disavowing your exclusive right to the Graces: for it must be confessed that France is their abode, or rather their native country. It is highly improbable that they can be angry with you; but were that possible, they would be provoked to leave you, as a punishment for sending them a rambling, into a country where they neither know, nor are known by any mortal. If, by chance, I had any knowledge of those Goddesses, it could only be from having seen them so frequently with you. It is true that the Graces cannot be acquired; art may add to their luftre, but nature must have given them. It is the same in every thing. How many people are there who dance exceedingly well, but ungracefully; and

what

what numbers who dance very ill, and yet grace. fully? Do we not see frequently people with great and good sense; who, though instructed and adorned by knowledge and study, yet never can please, for want of those natural Graces, not to be acquired?

Every country has talents peculiar to it, as well as fruits, or other natural productions. We here think deeply, and fathom to the very bottom. Italian thoughts are sublime, to a degree beyond all comprehension. You keep the middle path, and confe-quently are seen, followed, and beloved.

I beg of you, Madam, make use of all that sense, and those Graces, which I know you to be possessed of, in my favour, by telling Mr. de Matignon, whatever they may inspire you, from me. The most friendly things you can say to him upon the marriage of his daughter, will best explain the sentiments of my heart. But do not confine yourself to that circumstance alone, for there is no event whatever that concerns him, in which I should not take an equal share. To write myself to Mr. de Matignon would be incroaching upon his goodness; such a messenger as you, must be more honourable to me, and more pleasing to him.

Adieu, Madam. I am ashamed of the length of this letter.

CCCCXLV.

337

CCCCXLV.

These Lines are inserted, in order to introduce the following Letter with greater propriety.

To the EARL of CHESTERFIELD, August the 7th, 1763.

R Eclin'd beneath thy shade, Blackheath!
From politics and strife apart,
His temples twin'd with laurel-wreath;
And virtues smiling at his heart:

Will CHESTERFIELD the Muse allow
To break upon his still retreat?
To view, if Health still smooths his brow,
And prints his grove with willing seet?

'Twas this awak'd the present theme, And bade it reach thy distant ear; Where, if no rays of Genius beam, Sincerity at least is there.

May pale Disease fly far aloos!

O'er venal domes its flag display!

And Health, beneath thy peaceful roof,

Add lustre to thine evening ray!

Vol. IV.

eat ed for 23 ink

ian mofe-

nie,

ffed

hatmoft

iage

ts of that qual

ould

nger

more

th of

XLV.

Q

If

338 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

If this my fervent wish be crown'd,

I'll dress with flow'rs Hygeia's shrine;

Nor thou, with Wisdom's chaplet bound,

At any absent gift repine.

What the 'thou dost not grace a throne, While subjects bend the supple knee; No other King the Muses own, And Science lifts her eye to thee.

Tho' deafness, by a doom severe,
Steals from thy ear the murm'ring rill,
And Philomel's delightful air;
Ev'n deem not this a partial ill.

Ah! if anew thine ear was strung,
Awake to ev'ry voice around,
Thy praises by the many sung,
Would stun thee with the choral sound.

EDWARD JERNINGHAM.

syon and the ball

a cheef a remain

And the start, but all the

Larry Strat of School 160

fo fu

de

hi w:

yo

for

ne

be

CCCCXLVI.

LETTER

To EDWARD JERNINGHAM, Efquire.

Blackheath, August the 12th, 1763.

SIR.

T Do not know whether I can, with decency, ac-I knowledge the favour of your poetical letter of the 7th. But Men, as well as Women, are very apt to break through decency, when defire is very strong, as mine I affure you is, to thank you for it. Could I give you as good as you bring, my thanks should be conveyed to you in rhime and metre: but the Muses, who never were very propitious to me when I was young, would now laugh at, and be as deaf as I am, to the invocation of a feptuagenary invalid. Accept then my humblest thanks, in humble profe, for your very good verses, upon a very indifferent subject; which, should you be reproached with, you may very justly make the same answer that your predecessor, Waller, did to King Charles, after the Refloration: the King accused him of having made finer verses in praise of Oliver Cromwell, than of himself; to which he agreed, saying, that Fiction was the foul of Poetry. Am I not generous to help you out of this scrape at my own expence? I am sensible that before I end this letter, I ought to show some common-place modesty at least; and protest to you that I am ashamed, confounded, and in a manner annihilated, by the praises you most undeservedly bestow upon me; but I will not, because if I did I Qz shoul 1

HAM.

XLVI.

340 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

should lie consoundedly; for every human creature has vanity, and perhaps I have full as much as ano. ther. The only difference is, that some people disown any, and others arow it; whereas I have truth and impudence enough to say, tu m'aduli ma tu mi piaci.

What am I to suppose that you are now doing in Norfolk?

Scribere quod Cassi Parmensis apuscula vincat, An tacitum sylvas inter reptare salubres?

If you stray among the hills, vales, and purling streams, it is to make your court to the Muses, who have long had such an affection for you, that (I will answer for it) they will meet you wherever you please to appoint them. If to those nine ideal Ladies you add a tenth, of real good country slesh and blood, I cannot help it: but God forbid that I should advise it! In all events, I believe you would be equal to the ten.

I am, with equal truth and effeem,

SIR,

Your most faithful, humble fervant,

CHESTERFIELD.

fa

fo

25

he

fix

60 fer

for 201

I a

fa

ar app wil

eou of ing Wh

P. S. I defire my respects to Lady Jerningham. But not one word of the tenth Muse.

CCCCXLVIL

CCCCXLVII.

LETTER

To DOCTOR MONSEY.

Bath, December the 23d, 1767.

DEAR DOCTOR.

ere

10. lif-

ath mi

in

ing

who will cafe

YOU

d, I

luife

d m

ELD.

am.

VIL

7 OUR friend and my Governor, Mr. W-, told me that he had received a letter from you. with your kind inquiries after my health; but at the fame time faid, that I might e'en answer it myfelf; for how the devil should he know how I did, sq well as I myself did? I thought there was reason in what he faid; fo take the account of myfelf from myfelf, m follows. When I first came here, which was just fix weeks ago, I was very weak of my legs, and am so kill. A fortnight ago I had a little return of my fever, which Doctor Moify called only a Febricula; for which he prefcribed phlebotomy, and, of course, the saline draughts, The phlebotomy did me good, and the faline draughts did me no harm, which is all I alk of any medicine, or any medicue. My general flate of health has, ever fince that, been as good as, at my age, I can hope for; that is, I have a good appetite, a good digestion, and good sleep. You will, perhaps, ask me what more I would have? I answer, that I would have a great deal more, if I could; I would have the free use of my legs, and of all my members. But that, I know, is past praying for. Perhaps you may be in the fame case. Whom have you quarrelled with, or whom have you been reconciled to lately ? The House of G -, or Q3

342 MISCELLANEOUS PIECES.

the house of M—? And where are you now; in Norfolk or Monmouthshire? Wherever you are, I hope you are vastly well; for I am very sincerely,

Your most faithful friend and servant,

CHESTERFIELD.

CCCCXLVIII.

LETTER

To Doctor Monsey.

DRAY, dear Doctor, why must I not write to you? Do you gentlemen of the Faculty pretend to monopolize writing in your prescriptions or proscriptions? I will write, and thank you for your kind letters; and my writing shall do no hurt to any person living or dying: let the Faculty say as much of theirs, if they can. I am very forry to find that you have not been wally well of late; but it is wally to the honour of your skill to have encountered and fubdued almost all the ills of Pandora's Box. As you are now got to the bottom of it, I trust that you have found Hope; which is what we all live upon, much more than upon Enjoyment; and without which we should be, from our boasted Reason, the most miserable animals of the Creation. I do not think that a Physician should be admitted into the College, till he could bring proofs of his having cured, in his own person, at least four incurable distempers. In the old days of laudable and rational Chivalry, a Knight could of ledow bod you or le

God wall is felf and fever faw

but cal, part dua levi

goo

Fro

Y

could not even present himself to the adorable object of his affections, till he had been unhorfed, knocked down, and had two or three spears or lances in his body; but, indeed, he must be conqueror at last, as you have been. I do not know your Goddess Venus or Vana, nor ever heard of her; but if the is really a Goddess, I must know her as soon as ever I see her walk into the rooms; for vera inceffe patuit Dea. It is for her fake, I prefume, that you now make yourfelf a year younger than you are; for last year you and I were exactly of an age, and now I am turn'd of feventy-three. As to my body natural, it is as you faw it last; it labours under no particular distemper but one, which may very properly be called Chronical, for it is Xpovos itself, that daily steals away some part of me. But I bear with philosophy these gradual depredations upon myfelf; and well know, that levius fit patentia quicquid corrigere est nefas. And so good night, dear Doctor.

Bath, November 26th, 1766.

CCCCXLIX.

LETTER

From the Earl of CHESTERFIELD to Sir Tho-MAS ROBINSON, of Chelsea.

Bath, November 17th, 1757.

SIR.

YOUR letters always give me pleasure and information; but your last gave me something more, for it showed me that you were recovered from

Q4

that in , I LD. e to tend pro. 1907 any nuch that aftly and you . have nuch h we niferhat a ill be S OWA e old night could that illness, which the fears of Mr. Walsh, junior, had magnified into a dangerous one. I did not like your being sent to Hampstead for the air; that sounded very like Kensington Gravel-Pits. I am sure I need not tell you the part I take in your recovery.

As to General—'s affairs, my opinion is fixed; and I am very fure, that nothing will appear upon this examination to make me alter it. There is a mystery in it; and wherever there is a mystery, I have done; I respect, but never reason. The Ode upon that expedition is written by a master, whoever it is. The author of the Verses upon the scull, is certainly a poet, though he has spun out his matter too fore; half the length would have been much better.

cannot imagine why the Grub upon the Comet was laid at my door: but people have long thrown out their wit and humour under my name, by way of trial; if it takes, the true father owns his child; if it does not, the foundling is mine.

I take it for granted, that the King of Prussa's victory engrosses the thoughts of all your great politicians in town, and gives you what you call great spirits: he has shewn his abilities in it; of which I never doubted; but then—nothing, only that there are now seven or eight thousand of the human species less than there were a month ago. France will send double that number immediately, and the match will be as unequal as it was before; since all Europe is still combined against him, I will not say, and we because I think it would be impudent for us, now, to reckon ourselves among the Powers of Europe; I might as well reckon myself among the living, who

2

y

th

T

fo

th

of

only crawl upon the earth from day to day, exhibiting a shattered carcase, and a weakened mind.

ke

at

te-

d:

20

82

, I

de

ver too

net

was g of

, if ia's

aliſpi-

1945

are les

fend

will

e is

;

W, to

; I

who

only

Though these waters always do me some good, it is merely temporary; but they do by no means regenerate me. I grow deaser and deaser, consequently duller and duller; and therefore, for your sake, I will put an end to this dull letter; and assure you, with all the truth of a man who has no invention, that I am,

Your moft faithful, humble fervant, CHESTERPIELD.

CCCCL.

LETTER

From Lord CRESTERFIELD to Sir T. ROBINSON.

SIR, Bath, December 3d, 1765.

Always thought myfelf much obliged to you for your letters from Yorkshire, while you were in the hurry both of business and pleasure; your land-sheward, your tenants, and your agreeable country neighbours, employing your whole day in pleasure and profit: but I think myself still more obliged to you for your last letter, from your Monastic retreat in the midst of Ranelagh Garden; the place in the world the best calculated for serious reslections upon the vanities of this world, and the hopes of a better. There you may enjoy a philosophical and religious solitude, uninterrupted; except, now and then, by the rolling of coaches, the sound of forty instruments of music, and the much shriller sound of the tongues

Q'S

of

of about two thousand women. This is being a Chartreux indeed; and in addressing myself to you, I will take care to mix no levity in my letter; but confine myfelf to grave and moral reflections. For instance; fee the dire effects of passion, or brandy, or both, in the case of Mr. -, whose usual tranquillity and immobility have been transported to the most violent excesses of assault and battery, even upon the wife of his body; whom, I really believe, he never affaulted with fo much spirit before; and if he gets the reputation of madness, he will rather be a gainer by it; for nobody ever thought it could have happened to him. We have here a great many great folks, and a great many fine folks: the former met in Council, to confider how they should best ferve their country in the approaching fession; that being their only view: and the latter, I mean the Ladies, in the intention of serving themselves, or of being ferved right enough by others. But all these are dispersed, or dispersing now; and, I believe, I shall follow their example soon, and take myself away from hence to London; where I am too material a part of the busy, as well as of the gallant world, to be longer absent. But, whatever I am, and wherever I am, I am, very truly,

SIR,

Your very faithful, humble servant, CHESTERFIELD.

Ack

THE END.

INDEX

ut or or n-

he on he he e a iny

peft

hat

the

r of nese , I self

atelant

am,

. .

...

to:

LD.

1074

501

1

1134

537

TO

Lord CHESTERFIELD's LETTERS

TO HIS SON.

bered; it has been thought adviseable that the references in this Index should be made to the Letters, rather than in the common method of volume and page. The few Miscellaneous Pieces at the end of Vol. IV. are referred to in the same manner.

A.

ABERCROMBIE (General) 346.

Absent Man, how far different from a fool or a madman, 74. Is commonly either very weak or very affected, with the exception of a very few extraordinary individuals, such as Newton, Locke, and perhaps five or fix more fince the creation of the world, who may have had a privilege for being absent, 113. He who cannot fix his attention on the present object is fit neither for business nor pleasure, 121.

Accuracy in writing and speaking recommended, 97.
Achilles, an improper character for the hero of an Q6 epic epic poem, 176. Though invulnerable, always went to battle completely armed, 208.

Acquaintances, shunning them in public deemed a folly, instanced by an example, 293.

Acqua Tufana, a flow Neapolitan poisen, 323.

At of Settlement, considerations upon the repeal of the limitations in it relative to foreigners, 437.

After, what the indications of a young man's becoming confiderable in that profession, 173.

Addison (Mr) an instance of Lord Chesterfield's high opinion of him, 128. See Alberti.

Advice, is generally unwelcome, 112.

Ædiles, when that office was first inflituted. 21.

Eneas, fome account of, 7.

Africa, some account of, 90. The flourishing state of the war on that continent, 335.

Agrippa (a Roman Senator) a fable addressed by Ajax, some account of, 7.

Aiguillon (Duchels of) her character, 262.

Air du Couven, has something extremely engaging,

Aix la Chapelle, necessary questions relative to the treaty settled there, 152. The waters of that place recommended, 300.

Albemarle (Earl of) Mr. Stanhope advised to be attentive to him, 238, 239. Employs Mr. Stanhope in his bureau, 244, 263. His Lordstip's character, 279.

Alberti, his description of Italy furnished Mr. Addirences, 218.

Alchemy, remarks on, 164.

Alcibiades, was commonly a Proteus for Bad purposes, 299.

Alexander the Great, an inflance of his magnatimity,

Algarotti (Count) 289. Compared to Pontendle,

Allen (Lady) a warm puff, 317.

Allied

Allied Powers, have commonly some secret design in view, 160.

America, its first settlement concisely related, 39. 93. Plan of the intended operations of the late war there, 328. 333, 334, 335. The English affairs there have a promising appearance, 351. 357, 358. See Stamp-duty.

Amufement. See Pleafares.

44

of "

md's

ate

by

the ace

attanfig's

per-

iity,

Alle,

Allied

Auere (Galegai Marechale de) her just observation previous to her execution, 277.

Ancus (Marcina) fome account of) 18.

Andalasia, a province of Spain, celebrated for its hories, 84.

Augri, a people of Saxony, who conquered Britain,

Anne (Queen of England) some account of, 93.

Anne of Auftrie, her character, 436.

Anney (Comce de le) his fon's remarkable accomplishments commended, 73.

A tiquitier, should be viewed with a proper attention, but ought not to be the main objects of a judicious traveller, 107.

Apollo, his poetical history, 3.

Apethecary, story of one, who, having a fortune fallen to him, wished to quit trade, but found himself unable to exist without it, 328.

Appearances should be most strictly attended to in re-

Application, the great advantages of it in the beginning of life, 102.

A progon, on what occasions that expression often abfurdly used, 217.

Arabia, divided into three parts, 87.

Arbitrary Power, Lord Chefterfield's fentiments on it, 176.

Architecture (Civil and Military) an useful seience,

Agylt (John Duke of) his character as an orator,

Ariofto, character of his poetry, 217; which will bear a companion with Homer's, 253.

Aristides, some account of, 51.

Aristippus, his opinion of bringing up a son to learning, 30.

Art of Flattery, an innocent species of it recommended, 182, 183.

Art of Pleasing. See Pleasing.

Aruspices, their office at Rome, 17.

Asia, some account of, 85. Geographical description of Asia, ibid. The first great monarchies had their rise there, namely, the Asiyrians, Medes, and Persians, ibid. The war there settled, by Capt. Clive, to the satisfaction of this country, Aspinwall (Mr. Stanhope) a relation to Lord Chesterfield, 282. Appointed King's minister to the Dey of Algiers, ibid.

Assurance, steadily exerted, with a seeming modesty, a most useful qualification in every part of life, 232.

Aftronomy, a fludy of great importance, 170.

Athens, if not the mother, was at least the nurse, of all the arts and sciences, 11. This subject continued, 12. The Athenians the greatest men of

B

Be

Be

Be. Be.

antiquity, ibid.

Attention, an indispensable requisite in every sort of learning, 32. A want of it is either folly or madness, 74. Nothing to be done well without a man can command it from one thing to another, as occasion requires, 102. Strongly recommended, 130.

Attentions, a necessary ingredient in the art of pleafing, 156. A tribute which all women expect, 158.

Ought never to be omitted, 187.

Atterbury (Bishop of Rochester) the cause of the Duke of Ormond's absconding, 293.

Attic Salt, origin of that expression, 11. Recommended to Mr. Stanhope, 120.

Attilius Regulus, remarkable instance of his probity, Avaux (Mons. de) his adroitness as a negotiator commended, 248, 290. His letters excellent, 265.

Avaries,

Avarice, its fatal effects instanced in the story of Hippomenes and Atalanta, 29.

Augurs, their office at Rome, 17.

Avoir du monde, a very just and happy expression,

Aurora, why called the harbinger of day, 59.

Authors, the best of them are generally the severest critics on their own works, 109, 253.

Awkwardness, from what causes it proceeds, and the embarrassiments it occasions, instanced in the portrait of an awkward man, 74. An awkwardness of expression and words should be studiously avoided, 75, 144. Very alienating, 154. Gradations in it, 235. A more real disadvantage than it is generally thought to be, 434.

Axioms in Trade, 438.

f

£

f

n

١,

6-

3.

16

ıı-

1

10

5.

ce,

B.

Badinage, an art by no means to be despised, 248.

Baltic, an English squadron to be sent thither, to divert the Swedes, 328.

Bashfulness, the characteristic of an Englishman, 44,

69. See Mauvaise bonte.

Bath (Earl of) his death, and will, the subject of general conversation, 379. Particulars of his immense fortune, and of his Lordship's character, ibid.

Bayard (Chevalier) had the honour of knighting

Francis the First of France, 348.

Beaufort (Mons. de) governed by Madame de Montbazon, 436.

Beauty, the subject on which most women are openest to flattery, 120.

Bedford (Duke of) formed, in November 1767, a new ministry, 417.

Behaviour and learning should be inseparable, 80.

Bellegarde (Abbé de) his Art de plaire dans la Conversation commended, 111.

Bentley

Bentley (Dr.) supposed to have been the most learned man in England, 232.

Boer

Boli

0 tl

3

Bon

Boo

t

C

1

2

]

Bor

Bos

Bo.

Bo

Box

Bo

Br

Br

Berkeley (Bp.) Remark on his Treatife on Matter, 164. Berkenrode (Madame de) a favourite of Mr. Stanhope's, 240.

Berlin, a splendid court, 164. Frenchised, 278. The politest and most shining court in Europe, and the most useful one a young man can visit, 282. 302. The military government on a better footing than in any other country in Europe, 174. The arts and wisdom of government conspicuous there, 284.

Bernis (Cardinal) his difgrace sudden, and the reafons for it as little understood as those of his elevation, 349.

Bestucheff, to what his disgrace was probably owing,

Bible, almost every place mentioned therein makes a part of Turkey, 85.

Bibliomanie, should be guarded against, 220.

Bielefeldt's Letters, a publication containing many notorious lyes, 379.

Bienseance, a most necessary part of the knowledge of the world, 250.

Billet-doux, the manner how it should be written, 29. Biff (Messieurs de) Mr. Stanhope insrusted to their care, 248.

Blackbeath, all the fruit there in 1758 destroyed by unseasonable weather, 333.

Blake (Admiral). See Weight of Metal.

Blot (Madame de) though excessively pretty, yet confrant to her husband, 250. An attachment to her recommended, ibid. 251, 253, 255, 258. A piece of mohair presented to her, 262.

Boccage (Monf. and Madame de) an attention to them enjoined to Mr. Stanhope, 238, 242. Monf. Boccage's character of Mr. Stanhope, 276.

Bachat (Monf.) gives Lord Chesterfield a good secount of Mr. Stanhope, 115.

Baotian, why that term applied to a ftupid fellow, 53.

Boerbaave, his physical advice to Lord Chesterfield,

ned

64.

20-

78.

pe,

dit,

tter

74.

ous

ea-

ele-

ng,

kes

ABY

e of

. by

-10

ber

ièce

to to om.

20-

53.

Bolingbroke (Lord) his character, 202. His Letters on Patriotism extolled, 207. His Remarks on the History of England, 239. The amazing superiority of his style, 247. His Letters on the Use of History, 271. His Philosophical Works, 305.

Bon Mots, should be cautiously used in conversation,

Books, an acquaintance with them indispensable even to a man of the world, 113. How far a taste for curious books, or scarce and valuable tracks, is commendable, 170. 220. In what manner a casual loss of application to books may be supplied, 183. Many lose a great deal of time by frivolous reading, 216. 280. Looking too close to them, an ugly trick, and detrimental to the eyes, 71.

Borgbese (Princess) at the head of the beau mende at Rome, 218.

Boroughs, their price raised from ave-and-twenty hundred pounds to twice that sum, 416. Two seats for a borough fold for nine thousand pounds, 421.

Bos (Abbé de) his Reflections fur la Poësse et la Pointure, commended, 406.

Rethmar (Count) had a very bad species of the small-Pox, 334.

Bouchet (Madame du) objected to fome particulars relative to the funeral of Mr. Stanhope, 423.

Lord Chesterfield faw no reason to retract, in general, an opinion he had given her, 428.

Boubours (Pere) his Manière de bien penser dans les Ouvrages d'Esprit commended, 121. 138. 217. And his Suite des Pensées ingenieuses, 217.

Bradford family, their estates in possession of the Pulteneys, 379. 414.

Brown (Lady) had the gout in her eye, 360.

Brubl (Count) much in fashion in England, 386.

Married the dowager counters of Egremont, 411.

Brunfwick

Cal

Ca

Ca

Ca

Ca

Ca

Ca

Ci

Brunswick (Ferdinand Prince of) played a prudent and a faving game, 323. A blue riband intended for him, 347, 348. 351. His critical fituation, 352, 354. The blue riband given to the Hereditary Prince was a mark of very remarkable diftinction shewn to the family, 395.

Bruffels, the chief town of Brabant, 72. Famous for camblets and fine laces, ibid. Enjoys fome fingular privileges, 73.

Bruyere (M. de la) his Characters recommended, 161. 242. 256. One of his Maxims commended, 313.

Buccleugh (Duke of) to be married to Lady Betty Montague, 408.

Bullfinch, its docility recommended to Mr. Stanhope's imitation, 50. Ode on the death of one, 154.

Burrish (Mr.) furnished Mr. Stanhope with recommendatory letters to Munich, 300.

Busbequius, gives a good account of the manners of the Turks, 301.

Bufiness, those who see only the outside of it pant after its hidden charms, 141. Easily reconcileable with pleasure, 181. 189. 310. Business in one half of the day is the best preparative for pleasure in the other half, 328.

Busty Rabutin. See Sevigné.

B*** (Lord) played un dessous des cartes, 372.

Likely to accommodate matters with Mr. Pitt, 382. The Opposition propose publicly to attack his lordship in parliament, 391. Probably outwitted his antagonist into a peerage, 402. In politics, affected to be invisible, 414.

C

Cafar, why more pleasing than Cato, 210.
Cagnoni (Monf.) a very able man of business, 174.
Calais, the last town the English kept possession of in France, 72.

Calendar.

Calendar. See New Style.

ent.

on,

di-

lif-

for zu-

ed,

ed,

tty

e's

of.

int.

le-

in

for

2.

tt,

n-

0.

of

v.

m.

Calprenede, the best of all the old romances, 278.

Cambridge, not a feminary of politeness, 213. 244.

Camillus, an instance of his greatness of soul, 22.

Canton, a sea-port in China, from whence all our tea and china is brought, 89.

Capello (Monf. and Madame) an intimacy in their family recommended to Mr. Stanhope, 196, 199. Capitals, univerfally the residence of arts and sciences, 188. 198.

Captains of Foot, few of them but what are better company than Descartes or Newton, 288.

Cardinals, their number and authority, 113. A preference expected by them pointed out, 187.

Carving, a necessary accomplishment, 163.

Cassandra, some account of that romance, 7. It cannot be too much abridged, 278.

Case (Madame de) handsome, and invincibly modest, 254. 256.

Cases, two never exactly alike, 281.

Catiline, his conspiracy an unhappy subject for tragedy, 274.

Cate the Cenfor, regretted only three actions in his life, 9.

Censors, when first instituted, 21. Lord Chesterfield assumed a similar character in his directions to Mr. Stanhope, 204.

Ceremonies, though filly things in themselves, yet are necessary to be known, 440. See Forms.

Chambermaids, have fometimes caused such revolutions at courts as have produced still greater changes, 283.

Charlemagne, his crown still shewn in the cathedral at Brussels, 73.

Charles I. (King of England) his character, 93. Charles II. (King of England) his character, 93. In what particular his reign meritorious, 217.

Charles V. (Emperor of Germany, and King of Spain) a short account of, 66. A saying of his, 215.

Charle

Charles VI. (Emperor of Germany) some account of him, and his successor the Queen of Hungary, 76. Charles IX. (King of France) commissioned Viscount Dort to murder the Hugonots at Bayonne, 228.

Charles XII. (King of Sweden) his heroifm admired, but the Man nowhere beloved, 210.

Charlotte, (Queen) her character, 388.

Chartres (Colonel) thoroughly sensible of the disad. vantages attending the loss of character, 212.

Chatham (Earl of). See Pitt.

Chemists, as they extract some spirit out of every substance, so a sensible man elicits something which is worth knowing out of every being that he con-verses with, 135.

Chefterfield (Earl of) his motives for writing the Letters in this Collection, Advertisement. Objections obviated, Postseript to Advertisement. Ceasing to dictate as a parent, his Lordship assumes the character of an indulgent friend, 112. After friely scrutinizing his son, candidly tells him the faelts he hath discovered, 113. The post of Secretary of State in some measure inflicted on him, 116. Defires Mr. Stanhope to make him the confident of his amofements, 117. 132. The errors attending the younger part of his lordship's life arose from an ambition of being efteemed a man of pleasure, 119. When with Addison and Pope, thought himself in company as much above him as if he had been with all the Princes in Europe, 128. Renews his entreaties to Mr. Stanhope, to confider him in the character of a friend, 132. Used to call the Irifa his countrymen, 136. Happy in refigning his office, 139. Purchased the hall-pillars, ftair-case, &c. of Canons, 157. Received benefit from the Bath waters, 165. Always rose early in a morning, 171. Sent Mr. Stanhope his own diamend buckles, 186. Writes an imaginary dialogue between Mr. Stanhope and a diffipated Englishman, 193. His strict attention to purity of language, 266. Differs from Cicero in his definition of an orator,

i,

1.

b-

19

net-ins

10

12-rit

ilts

of 10-

of

ing

an 19.

felf

een

his

the

rik

his zie,

the

orn-

be-

man,

f an

ator,

orator, ibid. His definition of profe and poetry, 25. His embarrassment on entering the gay world, how shaken off, 213. Built a new picturegallery at Blackheath, 226. Brought into parliament a bill for reforming the calendar, 244. 249. Tells Mr. Stanhope what perfections he shall expect from him when they meet, 246. Convinced of the importance of eloquence, applied himself early to it, 247. Commissions Mr. Stanhope to purchase for him two pictures by Titian, 251. Sends three pieces of mohair to Paris, 250. His own account of his entrance into the great world, 261. A bon mot of his lordship's, 278. His uncommon anxiety for Mr. Stanhope's acquiring every perfection, 279. A remarkable instance of his lordship's inclination to please, when first he was embassador in Holland, 282. Is fearful lest his own former passion for play should operate to the prejudice of Mr. Stanhope's character, 283. Acknowledges his own fuccels in life to be more owing to les manières, than to any superior degree of merit or knowledge, 285. Cut off by deafnels from the pleasures of society, 289. His adroitness, in 1744, at the Hague, 291. Acknowledges his juvenile weaknesses, 294. Left off buying pictures in the way of wirth, 295. Regrets his neglect of the art of pleasing in his youth, 206. Receives a present from the Electress Palatine, in return for some fans which he had sent her, 297. Digested a fet of Maxims for the use of Mr. Stanhape, 298. Describes the weariness occasioned by the company of a worthy relation, who was fentible and learned, but descient in knowledge of the world, in manners, and in address. 299. His remarks on Oriental history, particularly that of the Jews, 301. Had an extraordinary barbet brought him from France, ibid. Reading becomes his only refuge, 305. What his practice at Cambridge, on meeting with thining pieces of eloquence, 307. His great object was, to be at all events a speaker in parliament, 308. Describes bis first entrance inte into the House of Commons, 303. Retirement. which was his choice when in health and spirits, at length became indispensable, 309. His conduct when Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, ibid. Wifhes only to be the counsellor and minister of Mr. Stan. hope's rifing ambition, 309. Spoke in parliament before he was of age, and experienced on that oc. casion the indulgence of the House, 311. What the motive of his playing whilft at Bath, 314. Foresaw the secret aim of the treaty in 1746 between the two empresses, 315. Received benest from the Bath waters, 323. Laments the fituation of his country, 324. His way of life at Bath, ibid. The melancholy flate of his health, 332. Sends Mr. Stanhope some quadrille tables, 335. Is not anxious to prolong life, but wishes to mitigate its evils, 343. When, and why, he learnt the Spanish language, 352. Nourished, at Blackheath, by an als, a cow, and a goat, ibid. Vertumnus and Pomona propitious to him, 353. In what manner he bore disappointments, 355. Enables Mr. Stanhope to extricate himself from some pecuniary inconveniences, ibid. Blackheath properly his habitation, 356. Is attacked for the first time by some symptoms of the stone and gravel, 369. Fixed a separation between his brother and his wife, 371. - Difficulties attending that negociation, 372. At feventy years of age, found nothing either worth desiring or fearing, 375. Sends Mr. Stanhope five hundred pounds, for one quarter of a year's allowance, 380. Reduced to the miserable situation of the Sphinx's riddle, 394. Sends Mr. Stanhope two hundred pounds for a Christmas-box, 395. Gave his proxy for repealing the American flampact, 397. Imagined he had fome skill in medicine, 402. His disorder in 1732 was a febrific humour which fell into his legs, 405. The South of France, in 1741, fnatched him from the grave, 407. His prescription for the head-ach, 415. Continues very lame and weak, and despairs of ever getting any strength in his legs, 418. Calls himself a very good quack, 419. Relied too much on the promise of a great minister, ibid. Sends Mr. Stanhope some of the Duches of Somerfet's fnuff, 422. Approves of the manner in which his fon was buried, and wishes to see Mrs. Stanhope and her two children, 351. Takes upon himself the whole charge of the children, 424. Fixes them at school with Mons. Perny, 425. Gives Mrs. Stanhope, from Bath, a description of his own state of health, 426, 427. His observations on the planting of pines and oaks, 429. His remarks on the Maxims of Cardinal de Retz, 433. Maxims by his lordship, 434. His humourous petition to King George the Second, 439. Recommends Mrs Cleland to Madame de Tencin, 442. Had no skill in fortune-telling, 443. Exchanges coquetry for friendship, 444. Acknowledges the favour of Mr. Jerningham's elegant verses, 446. The Grub-street writers fathered their productions on his lordship, 449. Acknowledges the civilities of Sir Thomas Robinson, ibid. 450.

Cb

Cb

Chevreuse (Madame and Mademoiselle de) governed by the Druidi for the time being, 436.

Chigi (Cardinal) what a remarkable particularity in him, 190.

Childe (Sir Josiah) his little book on Trade commend-

ed. 220

ıt,

at ıa

es

In-

ent

DC.

hat

14.

be-

efit

ion

bid.

nds

not

its nich

y an

Po-

nner

tan-

v in-

ha-

e by ixed

371.

At

vorth e five

llow-

on of hope

395.

amp-

icine,

mour

ath of

, 407.

tinues

etting

China, conquered by the Tartars, 89. Reckoned the most populous country in the world, ibid. Its Emperors, absolute as they are, govern with justice and equity, 221.

Chronology, its nature and use, 34. 40.

Chudleigh (Miss) visited Mr. Stanhope at Dresden, 391, 392. Her absence from the Duke of Kingston a dangerous experiment, but it succeeded well, 393. Well versed in the arts of courts, 400. Cicero, no man succeeded better as an orator, 10.

His epiftles are the most perfect model of good writing, 10. Particularly those to Atticus, 123. His philosophical works highly admired, 312.

0

C

Ca

Co

Con

Cor

Cor

Cof

Cott

Cor

Cour

eı

h

al

Cour

h

Cot

Civility, particularly due to all women, 95.

Civilities, of inferiors and ruftics often troublesome and difgusting to men of rank, 26.

Classical works, a gentleman should understand those of every language, 273.

Claudian, his encomiums on virtue, 68.

Clairaut (Monf.) gives Lord Chefterfield a friendly account of Mr. Stanhope, 297.

Cleanliness, an indispensable duty, 186.

Cleland (Mrs.) recommended by Lord Chesterfield to Madame de Tencin, 442.

Clerici (Madame) her house at Milan the resort of people of fashion, 215.

Clive (Captain). See Afia.

Code Frederique, its good effects, 305.

Coderc (Monf.) infructed Mr. Stanhope in modern history, geography, and chronology, 96.

Colas (an ignorant, infignificant Frenchman) epigram on his death, 48.

Cold Bath, prejudicial in arthritic or rheumatic case,

Collana, what it originally was, and what it now is,

Colman (Mr.) Remarks on his comedy (the Jealous Wife) 350.

Commendations from men of merit, the greatest plesfure any body can feel, 101. Observation of Tacitus on the same, ibid.

Commerce, remarks on that of France, 236.

Commissions, a man should avoid the charging himfelf with such as are trisling, 264.

Common-place Observations, the ordinary topics of witlings and coxcombs, 150.

Company. Two forts of good company; and every man has it in his power, by deferving it, to get into the best, 128. Rules for conversation in mixed companies, 129. General directions for conduct in company, 166, 167. Nothing forms a young young man fo much as respectable and superior company, 274.

Comte de Gabalis (two little volumes fo called) contains the extravagancies of the Jewish Rabbins, used to this day by the Cabalists and Rosicrucians, 164.

Congreve (Mr.) points out a fort of critics to whom authors are accidentally obliged, 282.

Connexions, what fort of them most eligible, 231.

Conscience, nothing so comfortable as a good one, 41.

A bad one represented by an allegory, ibid.

Consciousness, the term defined, 41.

Confular government, its institution a remarkable epocha in the Roman history, 20.

Confus, the god of counsel, 18.

23.

ofe

dly

d to

of

lern

ram

afes,

¥ 15, lous

n of

Him-

23 of every

o get

n 10

rins a

roung

Contempt, nothing more impatiently borne, or less forgiven, 113. Wrongs may be forgiven, but contempt never is, 155. It should therefore most carefully be concealed, 161.

Conti (Prince of) governed by his fifter, 436.

Convent. See Air du Couvent.

Conversation, how conducted by a well-bred man, 111. Conway (General) his character, 389. Defired by the King to keep the seals till a successor could be appointed, 413, 417,

Corinth, its commerce confiderable, 53.

Co neille, the restorer of true taste in France, 237.

Corficans, a short account of, 320.

Cosel (Countess) commissions Mr. Stanhope to sell some diamonds for her, 383.

Cotterel (Sir Clement) why fent to Holland, to invest the Prince of Orange with knighthood, 349.

Cotton grows upon shrubs or bushes about three seet high, 88.

Covetousness, exemplified by an anecdote, 28.

Countenance, should always be kept unmoved and unembarrassed, 183. People unused to the world have babbling countenances, 277. See Douceur. Country, to die in desence of it, the most glorious of all actions, 13.

R

Courland

Courland (Duchess of) extremely well-bred, 135, 136. Courtier, without parts and knowledge, the most frivolous of human beings, 150. Not more adroit in diffimulation than many a country farmer, ibid, His employment is as much a trade as a shoe.

maker's, 283.

Courts, the best schools for teaching the manners of the world, 148. Remarks on them, 190, 191. The best key to characters, 257. Merit without favour does little there, 283. Their manières perfonal, local, and temporal, 289. The theatre of war to a negotiator, 298.

Cowper (Lord Chancellor) in what his strength as an orator confisted, 205.

Cranmer (Mr.) A very sensible merchant, 173.

Craven (Lord) the professed and valorous knight-errant to the Queen of Bohemia, 375. Mr. Harte had free access to his lordship's papers, ibid.

Crebillon the Younger, his literary character, 237. 248. Allusions to a fentimental novel of his, 253. An absurdity in one of his tragedies, 274.

Cromw Il (Oliver) his act of navigation gave a severe blow to a confiderable article of the Dutch profits,

Cumberland (Duke of) Remarks on the neutrality which his Royal Highness concluded with Marshal Richelieu, 319. His arrival in England expected to make a buftle, 320. Refigned his commission, 322. No probability of his refuming his employments, 323; Talked of bringing his convention under the cognizance of the parliament, 324,

Curiofity, by what means it may be gratified without appearing impertinent, 141.

Curius, his difinterestedness, 47.

See Forms. Customs.

C-e (Madam) elopes from her husband, and comes to London with a jeweller, 350.

D

D

D

L

D

D

D

D

D.

Dancing, how far a necessary qualification, 104. Though a trifle in itself, gives habitually a genteel carriage, 163.

Dante, his language obscure and difficult, 217.

Daphne, why changed into a laurel, 8.

Daupbin, why the heir apparent of France so called,

36. fri-

TOIL bid.

30e-

s of 191.

hout per-

e of s an

t-er-

arte

248.

An

evere

ofits,

ality

rhal

ected

fion,

ploy-

ntion

thout

Day of Judgement, a poem of Dr. Swift's, under that title, 287.

Decemviri, elected for the institution of new laws in the year of Rome 300, the Romans before that period having no written statutes, 22.

Decency, one of the most important points of life, what it properly is, 31.

Degenfeldt (Madame) a Dutch beauty, 300.

Demagogues, should be cautious of assembling the populace unnecessarily, 162.

Demosthenes, some account of, 11. Became a celebrated orator, notwithstanding he laboured under many natural disadvantages, 77. 105. 207. definition of the requifites for an orator, 71.

Denmark (King of) well paid by France for his neutrality, 352.

Description, its importance in poetry, 57, 58.

Devonshire (Duke of) laboured hard to reconcile the Ministry, 323. His refignation an important event, 362.

De Witt (Pensionary) by what means he was enabled to purfue pleafure amidit a multiplicity of bufiness, 121. 211. 283.

Diamonds, an article nobody would purchase without feeing, 383.

Dictator, the origin of that office at Rome, 19.

Dido, her history epitomized, 4.

Diet of the Empire, what it is, and where held, 73.

Diogenes ridicules the inhabitants of Megara for their indolence and neglect of education, 30.

R 2

Diogenes,

meing,

comes

Diogenes, a wife man for despising ceremonies, but a fool for shewing that he did so, 104.

Disaffeded, how the term is used, 103.

Disappointments, easily borne by a wise man, 355. Dissimulation, no business can be carried on without some degree of it, 183. See Simulation.

Distich made upon the good fortune of the House of Austria in their marriages, 76.

Dorchester (Lady) an odd faying of hers, 171.

Dorfet (Duke of) remarks on his administration in Ireland, 309.

Dort (Viscount) his spirited letter to Charles IX. of France, when commissioned to murder the Hugonots at Bayonne, 228.

Douceur of Countenance recommended, 301.

Dresden, the price of the necessaries of life exorbitant in that city, 380.

Drest, in what the difference of it between a man of fense and a sop consists, 104. An attention to it recommended, 113. What the sashionable dress for gentlemen in the year 1748, 173. A man's sense and character may be judged from it, ibid. Rules for it, 201. One of the various ingredients that contribute to the art of pleasing, 261.

Drinking, how an excess in it may be decently avoid-

ed, 284.

Du Clos, a reflection of his mentioned with approba-

Dunkirk, belonged formerly to the Spaniards, taken by Oliver Cromwell, and fold to France, 72.

Du Pin (Madame) had beauty, art, and reading, 252. An arrangement with that lady recommended, 255, 256. 270.

Duval (Monf.) recommended to Mr. Stanhope, 146. Gives Lord Chestersield an account of Leipsig and of Mr. Stanhope, 158. His challenge to the latter gentleman in rhime, 171. E

E

E

E

E

E.

Earthquakes, in the year 1750, two were felt at London in twenty-eight days, 220.

Education, its importance, 147.

Edward I. II. III. IV. V. (Kings of England) their characters, 93.

Edward VI. succeeded to the throne at nine years old, and died at fifteen, 93.

Egotism, should be banished from conversation, 129. Is as proper and satisfactory amongst intimate friends, as it is impertinent and ill-placed amongst strangers, 328.

Egremont (Earl of) died of an apoplexy, 370. His Countess was afterwards married to Count Bruhl, 411.

ta

out

ofe

in

X.

the bi-

of o it

res m's

bid.

nts

oid-

ba-

ken

ng,

nd-

146.

and lat-

arth-

Einstedlen (Count de) questioned very closely by Lord Chesterfield, 188.

Elections, the frenzy of them carried in 1768 to an amazing height in this kingdom, 421.

Eliot (Mr.) gives a favourable account of Mr. Stanhope, 159. His concern at the loss of his father, 169. His friendship brought Mr. Stanhope into parliament, 307. 309.

Elizabeth (Queen of England) her character, 93.

Ellis (Mr.) nephew to Lord Chestersield, 400. A red riband and a negotiation into Spain intended for him, ibid.

Eloquence, more necessary, from the nature of the English constitution, in this country than in any other, 205. 207. The works of Cicero and Plato have been preserved to posterity by their eloquence, 312.

Employment, whether in bufiness or in pleasure, should be attended to, 130.

Emulation, a fensible pleasure, and a warrantable pride, 112.

England, originally called Britain, 93. Invaded by R3 the the Danes, ibid. What the two great epochas in The only monarchy in the its hillory, 153. world that can properly be faid to have a Conftitution, 221. In the year 1764, appeared fupinely tame to the infults of France and Spain.

381. 383.

English, a mauvaise bonte, and an awkward bashfulnefs, or embarraffment, their diftinguishing character, 44. 69. 293. Spoken badly by almost all English people who have no learning, 92. Why foreign travel is generally useless to them, 111. Are very often, even in parliament, incredibly ignorant of foreign affairs, 139. Which the best The English coffeeof their authors, 211. 273. house at Paris a most degrading place, 222. Character of the Milors Anglois there, 223. gallantries (in foreign countries) have a low turn, 227. Every porter in England is a consummate politician, 248.

Entregent, a French term for the polite jargon of good company, 163.

Envy, a mean and most tormenting passion, 32. Beautifully described by Ovid, 56.

Eon (M. de). See Guerchy.

Epitaph, on Colas, a vain obscure Frenchman, 106. On a virtuous and beautiful young lady, ibid. Epithets, what they are, 32. Illustrated by a striking passage from Ovid, 58. Error, is properly the object of compassion, not of persecution or of ridicule, 126.

Effex (Earl of) on the point of marriage with Mis

Bladen, 429. Eftrades (Comte de) his character as an ambaffador, Estrade (Monf. de) his Letters commended, 280. Eugenia (a tragedy by Mr. Francis) its reception on the English stage, 272, 273.

Exchange, the technical terms of it easily acquired, 320. A dull, but useful, knowledge, 350.

F. Fabricius,

Fa

Fa

Fa

Fa

Fa

Fe

Fe

Fe

Fi

Fle

Fle

Fle

Fo.

For

For

F.

Fabricius, his remarkable moderation, 47.

Fagel (the Greffier) his character, 433.

Familianity (hould not be indifferiminate. 100)

Familiarity, should not be indiscriminate, 190.

Fashion. See Dress.

s in

fu-

ain,

ful-

ha-

all

Vhy

111.

ibly

beft

Fee-

ha-

heir

urn,

nate

n of 32.

106.

gais

ot of

Mis

dor,

0.

n on ired,

icins,

Favours, the greatest, by being awkwardly conferred, may give offence, 249.

Female politics, do not originate from the head, 436.

Fenelon (Archbishop of Cambray) some remarks on his general character, and particularly on his conduct in respect to Madame Maintenon, 295.

Ferdinand. See Brunswick.

Firmian (Baron) his panegyric on Mr. Stanhope, Flappers, their office at Laputa, 131. 194.

Flattery, allowable with women, 95. In what manner it should be used, 129. 182, 183. Every woman may be gained by any fort of it, and every man by some fort or other, 275. Though a base coin, is the necessary pocket-money at court, 434. See Beauty, Understanding.

Fleming (Count) well calculated to retrieve the Saxon finances, 381. Though a hot man, a wife one, 387. His death, 413.

Folly. See Weakness.

Fontenelle (Abbé) his Pluralité des Mondes informing and pleasing, 170. 249.

Foreign Bufiness, the immediate object of Mr. Stanhope's destination, 238.

Foreign Ministers, in what manner they should transact business, 164. Their profession has an agreeable peculiarity in it, 248. The French greatly superior to the English in this department, ibid. Should never be under the necessity of trusting to a translator for any European language, 285. Can never be good men of business, unless they are also agreeable men of pleasure, 290. The political differences of their courts should never influence their personal behaviour, 327. Instructive maxims for them, 434.

R4

Foreign Travel. See Travelling.

Forgetfulness, proceeds fingly from want of attention,

Forms, their difference in different nations should be attended to, 125. 194. 289.

Fortification, how far a knowledge of that science necessary to a gentleman, 156. 181.

Fox (Mr. Henry) on the death of Mr. Pelham, talked of for prime minister, 310. Some traits of his character, ibid. Declared Secretary of State, 311. Resigned the day following, 312. Endeavoured to reconcile the ministry, 323.

Foxbunters, a species of beings appropriated to this kingdom, 262.

France, the names of the twelve provinces into which it is divided, with a short account of each, 82. Nobody there bows to the King, or kiffes his hand, 125. What a remarkable period in its history, 152. Possesses peculiar advantages over other countries, 160. Their monarchs gentle from custom, though without any constitutional bar to their will, 221. What parts of the history of that kingdom most necessary to be studied, 241. Remarks on its commerce, 236 260; on its parliaments, 266; on some obscure law-terms, 267. Hath always profited skilfully of its having guarantied the treaty of Munster, 275. The confusions arising from the disputes between its clergy. and parliament, 303. The affairs of that kingdom grow serious, 304. Supplied all the foreign markets with sugar, 320. Remarks on their threatened invasion of England, 356. In 1764, France and Spain insulted this country with impunity, 381.

Francis I. (King of France) his delicacy in the choice of a person he was to receive knighthood from, 348.

Francis

F

F

Francis (Mr.) See Eugenia.

Frederick II. (King of Prussia) when he killed any quantity of wild boars, compelled the Jews to purchase them, 308.

flu-

tive

tion,

d be

ne-

ked

his 311.

ured

this into

ach,

iffes

n its over

onal

HOLA

lied,

On.

VIDE

con-

ergy.

eign

their 764, im-

the hood

ancis

Frederick III. (King of Prussia) the greatest and most virtuous Man, and the ablest Prince, in Europe, 287. 305. In a very critical fituation, 317. 319. Reflections on a fignal victory gained by that monarch, with some outlines of his character, 325. That victory of his of more importance than at first it seemed to be, 326, 327. Though in 1758 the Prussian Monarch was, in Lord Chesterfield's opinion, nec pluribus impar, yet, as the plures feemed to amount to a great degree of plurality, it was feared that his courage and abilities must yield at last, 328. Mr. Stanhope advised to recommend himself to that King's notice, 331. Pursued the advantages he had gained, 133. The Prince of Prussia's death was no misfortune to the Public, 337. The King furrounded by an immense number of foes, 339, 340. His great actions difgrace preceding histories, and incline us to give credit to romances, 342. Speculations on his probable future conduct, 348. 351. His procedure towards Count Fleming, 386. character lowered by comparison with that of Prince Henry, 392. Reflections on his intended interview with the Emperor Joseph, 399.

French, naturally easy, free, and polite, 44. 69.

Those qualifications cover many of their faults,

117. Who their best classical writers, 273.

Friendship, professions of it from strangers should be received with civility, but not repaid with considence, 108. 209. Real friendship, a slow grower, 128.

Fruit, though very wholesome, should be eaten with caution, 189.

Furies (the three) their names and office, 56.

G.

Gallantry, at Paris, is a necessary part of a woman of fashion's establishment, 227; and of a man of fashion's, 240. A turn to it of great service to a foreign minister, 248. In what manner conducted by a man of fashion, 256.

Galley-flaves (in France) confift chiefly of Turks and criminals, 79.

Gallican church; its dispute with the crown a very important question, 262.

Gaming, in what manner a stranger is led to it at Paris, 222.

Genealogy, a favourite science in Germany, 125.

Genileman, of what nature his decent expences at Paris. 233. Has but two procedes, when injured or affronted, 291.

Geoffraine (Madame) had a great deal of wit, 252.
Geography, a proper amusement for short evenings, 9. Necessarily the companion of history, 33. A general idea of the science, and its use explained,

George II. (King of England) detested gaming, 283.

Nobody more expert in all parts of good-breeding, that being the particular of every man's character of which he first informed himself, 284. Had a good opinion of Mr. Stanhope, 318. 323.

Presented the Prince of Wales with a service of plate, 325. His death expected, from a whimsical reason, 347.

George III. (King of England) his Majesty's illness in 1765 no trisling one, 387. Shewed a public dislike to his old servants, 388. His goodness to Lord Chatham, 410.

German, a very useful language to a negotiator, 224. Germany, some account of its nine electors, 83. Great events frequent in that empire, 153. Remarks on their courts, 278. A map, and some short short book of travels through it, necessary companions on the German roads, 278. Its courts much more nice and scrupulous, in points of ceremony, respect, and attention, than the greater courts of France and England, 285. Nothing but making the empire hereditary in the house of Austria can give it a proper strength and essicacy, 286. The German ladies have always a great share in state assairs, 436.

Germans, seldom troubled with any extraordinary ebullitions of wit, 285.

Ghent, the capital of Austrian Flanders, 72.

Glynne (Sir John) his unsuccessful motion for annual parliaments, 329.

an

of 0 4

ted

nd

m.

Pa-

Pa-

OT

2.

gs,

ed,

83.

mg,

cter

Had

123.

e of fical

ness

ablic

is to 224.

83.

Re-

fome

Mort

Good-breeding, a most necessary and important knowledge, 44. Strongly recommended, 69. 80. The principal of those lesser talents which are most absolutely necessary to making a man beloved and sought after in private life; a genteel easy manner being of great consequence towards pleasing, 74. To be acquired when young, 80. Directions for attaining it, 94. Further enlarged upon, 95. Its essects, 111. All the talents in the world useless without it, 135. Defined, 200, 201, 202. With the greatest part of the world, passes for good-nature, 291. Is the best security against the ill-manners of others, 434.

Good-company, that expression defined, 161. 165.
Good-manners, to those one does not love, is no more a breach of truth, than "Your humble servant" at the bottom of a letter, 277. The settled medium of social, as specie is of commercial life, 304.

Goths, some account of their origin and government, 81. Subvert the whole Roman empire, ibid.

Gout, the distemper of a gentleman, 393.

Gower (Earl) made president of the council, 417.

Graces, cannot be too much attended to, 143.

There is no doing without them in the beau monde, 163. Mr. Locke lays great stress on their attainment, 168. Mr. Stanhope's desciency in R 6 them them gently reprimanded, 179. A devotion to the Graces strongly recommended, 101. 181. 191.

192. 195. 218. 281.

Grafton (Duke of) his character, 389. His reason for resigning in 1766 the office of secretary of state, 398. Uncertain whether he was to continue at the head of the treasury, 417. Engaged to bring Mr. Stanhope into parliament, if possible, on a vacancy, 419.

Granville (Earl) had the ablest head in England, 366.

Grave (Viscount de) his tragedy, called "Varon," the general topic of conversation at Paris, 269. Remarks on it, 270.

Greek, the importance of acquiring that language,

49.

Greenland, a vulgar notion, that words freeze there as they are uttered, 137.

Greventop (Monf.) Mr. Stanhope corresponded with him in the German language, 161. Lord Chefterfield's amanuensis, 306.

Guarini character of his Paftor Fido, 217.

Guasco (Abbé) his character, 226. 240. 242. 246. A diamond ring sent him by Lord Chesterfield, 249.

Guerchy (Mons. de) particulars of his difference with M d'Eon, 387. A bill found against him at Hickes's Hall, but stopt by a noli prosequi from the King, ibid.

Guerinière (M. de la) an attention to him recommended, 222.

Gunareby, whence that term derived, 350.

H.

Hair, much more ornamental than the best-made wig, 158.

Halifax (Earl of) when appointed Secretary of State, preferred the Southern department, 372.

Hamburgh,

Ha

Ha

Ha

 $H_{a}$

H

H

 $H_{\alpha}$

H

H

H

H

H

H

Hamburgh, some particulars of that city, 319. Party spirit ran high among the ministers there, 327. The great entrepot of business, 329.

to I.

on

of

to

le,

d,

59.

ge,

ere

rith

ref-

46.

eld,

vith

the om-

nade

tate,

ergb.

Hamilton (Duchess of) married Colonel Campbell (fince Duke of Argyll) in preference to the Duke of B—r, 350.

Hampden (Mr. John) Lord Clarendon's character of him, 207.

Hanover, some account of, 83. Its history recommended to Mr. Stanhope's attention, 285. The inaction of the army there censured, 329.

Harcourt (Marshal de) his MS. letters (in the posfession of Lord Chestersield) clear up an important period in the history of Europe, 280. His character as an ambassador, 281.

Hardwicke (Earl of) his friendship to Mr. Stanhope, 326. 331.

Haro (Don Lewis de) by conftant and cool perfeverance, in a treaty with Cardinal Mazarin, obtained feveral important advantages, 227.

Harrington (Earl of) when he went to refign the feals, expected he should have been pressed to keep them, 323.

Harte (Mr.) meets with an accident, 181. 185. His attention to Mr. Stanhope acknowledged, 218. Takes possession of his prebendal house, 246. Remarks on his History of Gustavus Adolphus, 353, 354. The success being unequal to his hopes, his health affected by it, 361. 363. Proposed publishing an improved edition of his History, 364. Dejected and dispirited, 374. Intended to print a great poetical work, 376. Published a good treatise on Agriculture, 381. A better poet than philosopher, 385. Severely attacked by the palsy, 495, 406. 412. 417. 422.

Hafte, very different from Harry, 190.

Haughtiness to servants and inferiors highly condemned, 203.

Head-ach, remedy for it, 415.

Health, deserves more attention than life, 99.

Hechi

Hecht (Monf ) the Ruffian refident at Hamburgh, 327. His reveries chimerical, ibid.

Hetter, some account of, 7.

Heinfius (Penfionary) governed by the Duke of Marl. borough, 168.

H

H

H

H

H

H

H

H

70

70

Henault (Monf.) his Histoire Chronologique de la France strongly recommended, 231.

Henriade (an epic poem by M. Voltaire) its character, 292.

Henry I. II. III. IV. V. VI. VII. VIII. (Kings of England) their characters, 93.

Henry IV. (King of France) generally beloved, 210. Had all the accomplishments and virtues of a Here and a King, 231.

Hertford (Earl of) Mr. Stanhope directed to wait on him at Paris, 373. Hervey (Lady) her character, 231. 236. 238. 244. Mr. Stanhope's panegyrift, 258. A caution given him respecting that lady. 263. A conversation of hers with Lord Chesterfield, 272.

Heffe Caffel (Princess of) testimony of her esteem for Mr. Stanhope, 334. An attention to that court enjoined him, 344, 345. 367.

Hillsborough (Lord) appointed Secretary of State for American affairs, 417.

Hippomenes and Atalanta. See Avarice.

Historians, most of them shew a provoking contempt for humanity in general, 297.

History, what it properly is, 33. 35. Caution necesfary in reading it, 160. Why always read to most advantage in the country it treats of, 232.

Hoc age, a maxim among the Romans, fignifying do what you are about, and do that only, 71.

Holdernesse (Earl of) communicates to Lord Chesterfield the office letters of Mr. Stanhope, 318. Requested the King to permit Mr. Stanhope's coming to England for his health, 353.

Holland, the finest and richest of the United Provinces, 1. Its principal towns, the cleanliness of its freets, and extensiveness of its trade, ibid. How far its influence extends over the other provinces, 433. See States General.

Hop (Monf.) his character, 282.

7.

rl-

nce

ac-

of 10.

ere

on 14.

en of

for urt

for npt

ef-

nost

ing

er-

Re-

ing

rin-

its

OW

far

Ho ace, his Art of Poetry, his master piece, 106. In what manner that poet was read by a thristy manager of time, 133. Was of opinion that water-drinkers could never be good writers, 428.

Horses, the Persian, the best in the world, 88.

Hotham (Sir Charles) recommended to Mr. Stanhope, Huet (Bp.) his Treatise on the Commerce of the Ancients commended, 160.

Hugo (Dr.) a skilful physician at Hanover, 286.

Hume (Mr.) his Essays recommended, 317.

Hungary (Empress Queen of) acceded to the family-compact, 380.

Hunting, difference between the practice of it in England and in France, 262.

Huntingdon (Earl of) his character, 231, 243, 263.

I.

James I. (King of England) his character, 93. James II. (King of England) some account of, ibid. Japan, short account of, 89.

Idleness, the mother of all vice, 9. It is scarcely possible to conceive that a reasoning being can squander away a single minute in absolute idleness, 173. Seldom leaves a man a moment's leisure, 320, 321.

Jeannin (Prefident) his letters very ufeful, 280.

Jenyns (Mr. Soame) his little poem, called "The "Country Lass," and the Answer to it, commended, 351.

Jerningham (Mr. Edward) his Verses to Lord Chefterfield, 445.

Jerusalem, some account of, 87. Destroyed by Titus the Roman Emperor, 85.

Tefuits,

Jesuits, the most able and the best-governed society in the world, 197. 208. Some account of their institution, 268. Resections on their expulsion from Spain, 410.

Jews, the absurdity of some of their modern historians, 301. The bill for their general naturalization injudiciously repealed, 303.

Ignorance, a feeming one very often a necessary part of worldly knowledge, 298.

Imitation, all amiable qualifications to be acquired by it, 214.

Inattention, the never-failing fign of a little frivolous mind, 108. 362. Nothing more offentive, 194. 278.

Indostan, some account of, 89.
Inseriors, how to be treated, 36.

Influenza, in 1767, epidemical at London, 413.

Injury, fooner forgotten than infult, 113.

Interest, the prevailing principle in life, 296.

Interregnum, can happen only in elective kingdoms, 18.

Intrepidity, we are more surprised at particular instances of it in times past, than in much greater which happen before our eyes, 162.

Joan d'Arques, short account of, 93.

John (Mademoiselle) her romantic expedition to England, 331. Rejects the offer of five hundred. pounds, 332.

John, (King of England) character of, 93.

Jointure, an observation on her present Majesty's, 360. Joker, nearly allied to a bussion, 190.

Joly (Cardinal) his Memoirs recommended, 436. Joseph (the present Emperor of Germany) his character, 399.

Ireland, what made Lord Chestersield's administration easy there, 309. What confused the Duke of Dorset's, ibid.

Irish, the healthiest and strongest men in Europe,

136

From, the most effectual method of exposing vice and folly, 27.

Italy .

I

1

Italy, from the time of the Goths, hath been constantly torn in pieces, 153. The language of that country easily attainable by those who are skilled in French and Latin, 199. Charles the Fifth said, he should chuse to speak to his mistress in it, 215. Authors of invention sew amongst them, 217. Who their best prose writers, ibid.

Julius Cæsar, an inflance of his true greatness of foul, 23; of his clemency, 65; of his thirst for glory, 91; of his abilities, 224.

Justice, its administration in various countries, a proper object of inquiry, 151.

Iwan (the Russian Prince) resections on his death,

K.

Keith (Mr.) employed at the court of St. Petersburgh, 326. Sets off thither in consequence of Lord Chesterfield's suggestions, 327.

King of the Romans, questions relative to his election, 240. Farther reflections on that subject, 286.

Kings, a well-bred man converses as much at his ease with them as with his equals, 151. 259. Those reign most secure, and the most absolute, who reign in the hearts of the people, 293. In what their education differs from that of other men, and in what manner their favour is to be gained,

King ston (Duke of) a remark on Miss Chudleigh's quitting his Grace, for the waters of Carlsbadt, 392.

Knights of the Garter, in what manner they are elected, 440.

n

i-

1-

rt

ed

4.

QS, .

inter

to

red:

60.

ha-

ion

ot

pe,

and

Italy ,

Kniphausen (Mons.) his character, 332. 334. Disliked a negotiation of M. Münchausen, 343.

Knowledge, a comfortable and necessary retreat in advanced age, 133. None but the ignorant despise it, 134. What parts of it most requisite, 152. Must be adorned by manners, 155. The possession of it increases desire, 161.

Knowledge

Knowledge of the World, to be acquired only in the world, not in a closet, 112. What it truly is, 127. Necessary for every body, 209. The most useful of all studies, 275. 280.

Kreuningen (Monf.) his reservedness, 300.

L.

Ladies. See Women.

Lacedæmonia, or Sparta; all its citizens were trained up to arms, 13.

Laconic Style, why so called, ibid.

Lambert (Marchioness de) her Avis d'un Mere à un Fil, a good book, 257.

Lambert (Sir John) Lord Chestersield wished to be of service to him in his profession of a banker, 269.

Language. The necessity of attending to the purity of it, 42. The shortest and best way of learning one is to know the roots of it, 63. Great attention to be paid to the primitive verbs and nouns, and the addition of prepositions, 103. Spoken badly in all countries by the common people, ibid. Modern, languages should be known correctly, accurately, and delicately, 273. Each has its peculiarities, 313.

Lascaris (Count) a warm friend to Mr. Stanhope, 179, 180, 181. 187.

Latin, in what that written by a gentleman-scholar differs from a pedant's, and why, 164.

Laughing, nothing so illiberal as loud laughter, 144.

Laurel, why esteemed the most honourable of trees, 8. Lazines, youth hath no pretentions to indulge in it, though it is allowable to the emeriti, 216.

Learning, the opinions the ancients had thereupon, 30. Of little fignification without memory, 71. From the groffest ignorance revived a little in the fifteenth century, 81. Flourished under Pope Leo X. in Italy, and under Francis I. in France, ibid.

Legge

Legge (Mr.) appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer,

Leipfig, some account of, 124. A place of study, rather than a place of pleasure, 171.

Letters, those to and from foreign ministers, as far as they go, are the best and most authentic records, 280.

Letter writing, a talent of the greatest importance, 10. The spelling and manner, recommended to notice, 29. Ought to be easy and natural, not strained and florid, ibid. Directions how to avoid a formal and unnatural style, with a specimen, 71. What the best models of it, 123. What the perfection of letters of bufiness, 265.

Lewis XIV. (King of France) the many still-subfisting expensive buildings are monuments of his munificence, humanity, and good government, 75. The age he lived in very much resembled the Augustan, 217. His vanity, not his knowledge, made him an encourager of the arts and sciences, 276. Gratisted his personal pride, by giving a Bourbon King to Spain at the expence of the true interests of France, 280. Whether really married to Madame Maintenon, 295. Never sate down in person before any town unless there was a certainty that it would be taken, 371.

Libertine destroyed, in what manner a pleasurable youth affected by that comedy, 223.

Liddell (Mr.) why chosen by Lord Chesterfield for his fecretary in Ireland, 309.

,

,

r

.

.

e

Ligonier (Sir John) appointed general and commander in chief, 324. Cruelly used by Lord Chatham, 402. Refused to resign, ibid.

Lifle, the chief town in French Flanders, 72.

Liver, what almost always specifics for obstructions in it, 353.

Local customs, should be carefully attended to, 201.

Longueville (Madame de) governed her brother the Prince de Conti, but was herself governed by Marsillac, 436.

Looks,

Looks, easier to be felt than described, 95. Frequently discover what words endeavour to conceal, 108.

Lord Mayer's shew, public exhibitions an useful way of acquiring knowledge by attention and observation, 46.

Loudon (Lord) much blamed for his retreat, 319.

Love, how represented by the poets, 56. Vows of eternal passion may sometimes accidentally last three months, 198. Love not unaptly compared to the small-pox, 282.

Lorundes (the famous Secretary of the Treasury) a prudential maxim of his, 216.

Luines (De) what made his fortune with Lewis the Thirteenth, 283.

Lursay (Madame de) friendly and hospitable, 244.

Lycurgus, the first legislator of Lacedæmonia or Sparta, 13.

Lying, nothing more criminal, mean, and ridiculous, exemplified in the confequence of various forts of lyes, 126. The only art of mean capacities, and infeparably attended with infamy, 212.

Lyons, has an extensive manufactory of gold, filver, and filk ftuffs, 77.

L * * *, his fingular character, 194. 202.

M.

Mably (Abbé) his Droit de l'Europe recommended, 156. 159.

Macareney (Sir George) to be married to Lady Jane

Stuart, 417.

Macclesfield (Earl of) one of the ablest mathematicians and astronomers in Europe, and had the greatest share in forming the bill for the reformation of the calendar, 247. 352.

N

Magna Charta, account of its origin, 93.

Machiavel, if he had been living in 1764, might have matched Cæsar Borgia with a suitable heroine, 382.

Mahony (Count) his house at Naples the resort of the best company, 221.

Maintenon (Madame) some remarks on that lady, on her letters, and on her supposed marriage with Lewis the Fourteenth, 205.

Lewis the Fourteenth, 295.

Maittaire (Mr.) gives Lord Chesterfield a favourable account of his son's progress in learning, 38, 39.

His abilities handsomely commended, 52.

Mallet (Mr.) his death, 387.

Maltha, some account of the knights of that order, 158.

Man of the world, his superiority over a systemmonger, 230.

Manières. See Forms.

C

-

f

d

r,

d,

ne

ti-

he

14-ght

ave

Manners, the ornament of virtue and knowledge, 152. 180. A certain dignity in them absolutely necessary, 190.

Mansfield (Lord). See Murray.

Marcel, a particular attention to his lectures enjoined, 240. 252. Which are of more consequence, at a particular period of life, than all the bureaus in Europe, 246. Of more use than Aristotle, 247. Marivaux, knew the human heart, perhaps, too well, Marlborough (Duke of) his character, 168. The influence of his manners and address upon the first King of Prussia, 276. Though an able negotiator, yet exceedingly ignorant of books, 281; the reason accounted for, ibid. Enjoyed the art of pleasing more than ever man did, 293. Slatterned himself into an immense debt, 309. No man ever said a rude thing to him, 434.

Marriage, a common topic for false wit, 150. Pleafantry on two intended ones, 335. A separation the only lasting peace between a man and his wife, 371. The rage of matrimony very prevalent, instanced in some in the polite world, 380. Marriage not understood in this country, instanced in three divorces, 395; and in Lord —, who parted with his wife, to keep another whore, 396. A matrimonial phrenzy rages, 407.

Marriage contracts, differ in France from those in England, 267.

Marfeilles, some account of, 79.

Marfillac. See Longueville.

Martial, a famous epigram of his explained, 244.

Martial air, eafily acquired, 255.

Martin (Mr.) Latin tutor to Mr. Stanhope, 42. Mary (Queen of England) her character, 93.

Mary II. (Queen of England) some account of, ibid.

Mary (Queen of Scots) beheaded, ibid.

Mary of Medicis, overturned in a river, and half drowned, 270. The Marshal d'Ancre executed, for having governed her by the arts of witchcraft and magic, 277.

Mascow (Professor) Mr. Stanhope attended his lectures on the jus publicum imperii, &c. 124. 135. One of the ablest men in Europe for political knowledge, 143.

Matignon (Marquis) Mr. Stanhope recommended to him, 234. 238.

Maty (Dr.) of fingular fervice to Mr. Stanhope, who had been unsuccessfully treated by some other gentlemen of the faculty, 377. 385. The only physician who did not mistake Mr. Stanhope's case,

Matzell, (a favourite bullfinch) Ode on his death, 154.

Maupertuis (Mons. de) his character, 174. 292. A just observation of his, 313.

Mauvaise Honte, its ill effects, 111. 144. 182.

Maxims, by Lord Chestersield, 434. By Cardinal de Retz, 435. Lord Chestersield's remarks on the Cardinal's, 436.

Mazarin (Cardinal) what his predominant passion, 209. His character, 436. See Haro.

Memories, fools only have short ones, 103.

Memoires de Sully, that work recommended, 231.

Memoires

A

A

N

M

M

M

M

M

M

Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire du 17eme Siecle recommended, 160.

Men, no distinction between them, but what arises from fortune, 36. Have done more mischies in the world than women, 110. A trisling species, called fine men, abounds in courts, 164. Have possibly as much vanity as Women, though of another kind, 202. Do not always act like rational creatures, 205. General conclusions respecting mankind not to be drawn from particular principles, 209. A Man's moral character more delicate than even a Woman's reputation of chastity, 239.

Mendez (Mr.) a friend to Mr. Stanhope, 195.

Merit, when it is remarkable, makes its way in spite of all difficulties, 152. Unaccompanied with external and showish accomplishments, never makes

d.

lf

d.

aft

ec-

cal

to vho

en-

hy-

afe,

ath,

A

al de

the

Hon,

noires

a figure in the world, 261.

Method, its importance through life, 309. Particularly in accompts, 319.

Merssonier (a wine merchant) his character, 304.

Midas, anecdote of him to expose the extreme folly of avarice, 28.

Middleton (Dr.) his character as a physician, 346.

Military Men, their character delineated, 281. When of a certain rank, are usually very polite, 288.

Milton, the Devil the hero of his Paradise Lost,

Mind, its health depends much on that of the body,

354. Minister (foreign) the requisites to make an able one,

Ministers, very shining ones, like the sun, are apt to scorch when they shine the brightest, 310.

Ministry, a most thorough change in it, in July 1765, 389. The new one an heterogeneous jumble of youth and caducity, 390, 391. The outlines of another, 417.

Minorities, fix have happened in England fince the Conquest, 248.

Mistress, a King's, or a Prime Minister's, may often give give very useful information to a foreign minister, 164.

Mitchell (Mr.) continued minister at Berlin, at the earnest entreaty of the King of Prussia, 332. 334. Mob, every numerous assembly such, however respectable the individuals, 247.

Modern History, how to attain the knowledge of, and where it commences, 81. Directions for the study of it, 145. 152.

Modesty, the best bait for praise, 224.

Meify (Dr.) Lord Chesterfield benefited much by his advice, 377. A physician of eminence at Bath, 405. 447.

Monarchy, the first form of government established at Rome, 16.

Monconfeil (Madame) Mr. Stanhope directed to confult her, 236, 237, 238. She gives a favourable account of him, 270. Mr. Stanhope directed to call on her, 373. Lord Chetterfield accused of exhausting on that lady his talent of faying agreeable things, 438.

Money, the cause of most of the quarrels that happen between fathers and fons, 233.

Monsey (Dr.) his powders of service to Lord Chesterfield, 402. Our noble author's regard for him, 447, 448.

Montbazon (Madame de). See Beaufort.

Montesquieu (President) his account of the education proper for a monarchical government, 228.

Moral Character, should not only be pure, but even out of the reach of suspicion, 212.

Moral Duties, to be strictly observed at all ages and Mordaunt (General) the public expected great discoveries from his trial, 323, 324. A previous examination into his conduct, by three general officers, 325.

Motteville (Madame de) her Memoirs recommended,

Mountstuart (Lord) going to be married to one of the Mis Windsors, 398.

Munchausen

1

A

A

N

M

M

Na

Na

Na

Na

Na

Nat

Nag

Nav

Munchausen (Mons. Madame, and Miss) 282. 284. Mons. Munchausen blamed for the Hanover convention, 322. Went to Stade on a bold and dangerous experiment, 323. The event of it fortunate, 331. A little pique he took against Mr. Stanhope adjusted by Lord Chesterfield, 335. Engaged in a negotiation with Prince Ferdinand, 343.

Munich, the first court at which Mr. Stanhope was presented, 125.

Munster (treaty of) what the views of the several parties concerned in it, 159.

3

t

.

e

of

-

n

r-

on

en

nd

cox2-

·ffi-

ed,

the u sen

Munter (Madame) a favourite of Mr. Stanhope's,

Murray (Mr. now Lord Mansfield) why confidered as an excellent speaker, 243. On account of his eloquence, had more practice than any other gentleman of the long robe, 307. His Lordship's eloquence in the House of Peers, 419.

Muses (the Nine) their names, and poetical history, 3.

Mystery, the only secrecy of weak and cunning men,

N.

Nails, directions for cutting them, 235.

Names (proper) no settled rules for those of the ancients, 18.

Naples, an ample theatre of wirth, 221.

Natural Affection, in reality there is no fuch thing,

Natural Curiofities, should not be the main object of a traveller's enquiries, 192.

Nature, dispute concerning the alteration and change of it, 281.

Navigation, a flight knowledge of it sufficient for those who are not of the profession, 156.

Navigation Act, some account of, 236.

Vol. IV. S Negotiator,

Negotiator, very few eminent for their learning, 281. what necessary to form a skilful and successful one, 290.

Neftor, some account of, 7.

Newcastle (Duke of) his weak side pointed out, 283.

Mr. Stanhope directed to offer his services in the several departments of his Grace's office, 284.

The illness of the Duchess an hindrance to Mr. Stanhope, 288. Whence the Duke's confusion in business arose, 309. 319. Appointed first Lord of the Treasury, 311. Interested himself in securing Mr. Stanhope's election, ibid. Distinguished that gentleman's official letters with approbation, 323. Supported by the Whigs, 324.

New Style, when and how introduced into this kingdom, 244. Particular account of the Julian and Gregorian calendars, 247.

New-year's-day, a time when the kindest and warmest wishes are exchanged without the least meaning, 297. The most lying day in the whole year, 349.

Night, Virgil's description of, with remarks, 67.

Nilme, remarks on its antiquities, 4c6.

Nivernois (Duke of) Embassador at Rome from the court of France, his character, 213, 214.

Nolet (Abbé) a philosophical tutor to Mr. Stanhope,

Northampton, an election for that town cost the contending parties at least thirty thousand pounds on each fide, 421.

Northington (Earl of) talked of quitting the office of Lord President, 412. Was requested to continue in office, 413.

Novel, is properly an abbreviated romance, 66. Numa Pompilius, some account of, 17. C 0,

0,

Or

OA

0/0

00

t

0.

Oaths, when unnecessarily taken, are always suspicious, 108.

Oeconomy, its advantages, 434.

Old Hock, where the best to be met with, 302. 334.

Oliver Cromwell, his character, 93.

Onflow (Mr. George) Mr. Stanhope, in May 1741, exhorted to endeavour to excel him in learning, each of them being then nine years old, 70. 96. Operas, Lord Chesterfield's opinion of them, 269.

Orange (William I. Prince of, called the Taciturne) his character, 433.

Orator, what properly he is, 10. The nature and use of oratory, 45. By study and application any man may become a tolerable orator, 77. What the best books to form and finish an orator, 203.

Orders (Military and Religious) their history well worth confulting, 158. Remarks on their foundations, 163. 270.

Orleans (Duke of) his character, 436.

Orloff (Count) his influence over the Czarina eafy to be accounted for, 411.

Ormand (Duke of) character of him, 293.

Orthography, one fingle error in it may fix a ridicule on a person for life, 236.

Offat (Cardinal de) an able negotiator, 248. His Letters the true letters of business, 265. 280.

Oftracifm, what it was, 51.61.

Oscitantes Librarii, that expression explained, 100.

Ovid, his beautiful description of Envy, 56; of Apollo and his Palace, 57; of Famine, 58; of the Morning, 59; of Noon, 60; of Rumour, 62. From a natural genius to poetry, often spoke verses without intending it, 77.

Sz

ful

83.

the 84.

Ar.

in

of

ing

hat

23.

ng-

and mest

ing,

349.

the

ope,

con-

is on ice of tinue

7.

P.

Painting, a liberal art, 198. Palatine (La). See Nieuville.

Pampigny (Mons.) commends Mr. Stanhope, 118.
Paolo (Fra.) his treatise De Beneficiis recommended, 197. 303. For this, and some other treatises against the court of Rome, he was stillettoed, 262.

P

P

P

P

P

Paracelsus, afferted that he had discovered the philosopher's stone, 164.

Paris, his disposal of the golden apple, 5.

Paris, a short character of that city and its inhabitants, 75. The seat of true good-breeding, 80. Cautions to Mr. Stanhope against his arrival at that gay metropolis, 222. 234, 235. Fashion more tyrannical there than in any other part of the world, 223.

Parliament, easier to speak there than is commonly imagined, 206. The chief place for an Engishman to make a figure in, 243. 318. Plain unadorned sense and reason not sufficient for a speaker there, 247. Those of France described, 266. Instructions to Mr. Stanhope for making a figure in parliament, 290. A persona muta there of the same importance as a candle-snuffer in any other theatre, 307. Receipt to make a speaker in parliament, ibid. Success in that article removes all other objections, ibid. Parliament, in this country, the only road to figure and fortune, 308. In that great affembly, a few only require common fense, the others flowing and harmonious periods, ibid. Why lawyers have a superiority in parliament, 309. The House usually indulgent to the first efforts of a member, 311. A fingular instance of unanimity in the House of Commons on an important occasion, 332. A still greater, 348. On crouded days, the House may be compared to la gretta del cane, 344. Impossible for any human being to speak well for three hours and a half, 366.

Partition Treaties, remarks on the two celebrated ones formed after the peace of Ryswick, 280.

Pascal, his Lettres d'un Provincial commended, 208.

Passions, every man has a prevailing one, by which he may be worked upon, and in which it is dangerous to trust him, 112; but which it is necessary to study, 129.

Patience, a most necessary qualification for business,

Patin (Guy) recommends to a patient, a horse for a doctor, and an ass for an apothecary, 404.

Patricians, their importance at Rome, 18. Abused their power, 21.

Peace, the prospect of it in 1757 not favourable to this country, 324. Very different the following year, 333. Remarks on the preliminaries, 435.

Pedantry, how to be avoided, 142. Pegasus, his poetical history, 3.

ed.

les

ed,

hi-

bi-

80.

at

icn

t of nly.

ish-

un-

r a

bed,

ng a

here

any er in oves

oun-

mon

ods,

ent,

firit

ance

n an 348.

pared

to

In

Pelham [Mr.) his death and character, 310.

Pelnote (Mr.) French tutor to Mr. Stanhope, 42.

Pembroke (Earl of) much commended in accounts from Hanover, 289.

Perron (Comte de) 179, 180.

Perron (Monf. du) his character, 282.

Persepolis, burned to ashes by Alexander the Great in a drunken fit, 88.

Persia, some account of, 88.

Pertingue (Cardinal) commends Mr. Stanhope, 172; and renders him some services, 174.

Petrarch, his poetical character, 217.

Physical Ills, great checks to Love and Ambition,

Pitifeus, his pedantry censured, 164.

Pitt (Mr.) his character, 243. His administration had many enemies, 323. Supported by the Tories and the Londoners, 324. Gained ground in the closet, without losing popularity, 332. Jogged

Poe

Po

Po

Po

Po

Po

Po

Po

Pr

Pr

on with the Duke of Newcastle, 333. His power in the House of Commons, 348. The junction of Spain with France did great credit to his political fagacity, 362. His vait consequence, 363. 365. Had three long conferences with the King, 371. Would not come into office without Lord Temple's confent, 389. A cripple all the year, and in violent pains at least half of it, 393. His gout very real, not political, 394. Accepted the title of Earl of Chatham, and had the entire nomination of a new Ministry, in which he chose the office of Lord Privy Seal, 400. The triumph of his enemies at his new dignity, ibid. Vindicated himself from the charges of a pamphlet published by Lord Temple, 401. Confined at Bath with the gout, 407. Too ill to hear of any bulinels, 409. 411. His gout thrown upon his nerves, 413. Conjedures on his future political plans, 416. Promiled to secure Mr. Stanhope a seat in the new parliament, ibid. Retired to Hayes, 417. His eloquence, 419.

Pist (Mrs.) Mr. Stanhope blamed for omitting to pay the homage due to her beauty, 298.

Places, how far they may be supposed to bias people of probity and property, 312.

Plato, the greatest philosopher that ever existed, and the most virtuous amongst the antients, 12.

Pleasing, a very necessary art, and how to be attained, 97. Strongly recommended in every part of life, 293. The great advantages derived from studying it, 296. In what it consists, ibid. What the most effectual of the various ingredients that compose it, 301.

Pleasures, those proper for a gentleman pointed out, 117. The rock on which most young men split, 119. A rational plan for attaining pleasure, ibid. Attention necessary in pleasures as well as in studies, 130. At proper times, both necessary and useful, 141. Rational pleasures pointed out, 174. Those which are liberal, how distinguished from their opposites, 180. 224. Sweetened by business, ver

of

cal

55.

71.

min

Juc

tle

ice

ne-

eif ord

ut,

II.

onroew

His

to

ple

ed,

. .

inom

hat

hat

lit,

bid.

Au-

and 74.

om uli-

els,

ness, 189. What the period of life for enjoying

Poetry, in what it differs from profe, 24. 43. The mechanical part of it may easily be acquired, but a genius for it must be the gift of Nature, 77. 98.

The only accomplishment which it is not in the power of every man of common understanding to attain, 113. A frozen brain unfit for it, Poets, the modern ones have adopted all the histories of the ancients, 2.

Poland (King of) what the probable consequences of his death, 3c4.

Polignac (Madame) not handsome, 249. A piece of mohair presented to her, 262.

Politenes, a certain fort of, due to inferiors, 36.

Politician, what properly his rudiments, 136.

Pope (Mr.) an instance of Lord Chestersield's high opinion of him, 128. Many people proud of boatting an intimacy with him and Swift, who never were twice in company with either, 251.

Pope of Rome, remarks on his pretended infallibility, 86. Hath always great influence in the affairs of Europe, 153.

Popularity, in private life how to be attained, 296.

Porsenna (King of Hetruria) some account of, 19.

Portland (Duke and Duchess of) pleased with Mr.

Stanhope's attention to Lord Titchfield, 345.

Portraits, list of some which Lord Chesterfield wished to purchase, 297.

Portugal (King of) why better off than any other of the belligerant powers, 363.

Poulet, whence that word applied to a billet-doux,

Prators, their origin, 21.

Pragmatic Sanction, why fo called, 76.

Praise, when not deserved, is the severest satire, 27. Prejudices, how imbibed, and by what methods to be gotten the better of, 176.

Pretender, directions for Mr. Stanhope's conduct, in Princes, their penetration feldom goes deeper than the furface, 202.

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

R

RR

R

R

R

R

R

R

Probity recommended, 24.

Pronouns, often create obscurity or ambiguity, 265.

Protestants, why so called, 93.

Proud Man, his infolent civility more shocking than his rudeness, 210.

Provincial Towns, the very best of them have some awkwardnesses, 188.

Prussia. See Berlin. Frederick.

Public Minister, his profession of all other requires the nicest and most distinguished good-breeding, 202.

Public Worship, no place which is fet apart for it can be an object of laughter or ridicule, 141.

Puifieur (Madame de) friendly to Mr. Stanhope, 2:3, 254.

Fulteney (General) his death, and immense riches,

Pulteney (Lord) recommended to the notice of Mr. Stanhope, 156. 172.

Q.

Quarles, disgraced and vilified the name of Emblems, 376.

R.

Rake, an ungentlemanly character, 233.

Ranelagh Gardens, admirably calculated for ferious reflections upon the vanities of the world, 348.

Rational Man, what the proper subjects for his selfexamination every night, 323.

Reading, how to be profitably pursued, 216. Ser Books.

Reason, he who addresses himself to it, without first engaging engaging the heart, is little likely to succeed, 161. Though it ought to direct mankind, seldom does, 308.

Reflection, what the proper age to use it, 176.

Reformation, begun by K. Henry VIII. and established by Queen Elizabeth, 93. The term explained, ibid. A very important æra in history, 149.

Regency Bill, Lord Chestersield's opinion of, 387.
Rembrandt, his paintings are caricaturas, 254.

Republick, the necessary institution of it is extinguished in the United Provinces, 433.

Reputation, no man deserves it, who does not desire it, 101. The advantages of a good one, 172.

Resentment, when impotent and unavailing, is beneath the dignity of a Man, 312.

Retz (Cardinal de) his Memoirs recommended, 145.
149. 161. Remarks on some select passages in them, 162. His sagacious reslection on Cardinal Chigi, 190. An excellent maxim of his applied to the repeal of the Jew bill, 303. His Political Maxims, 435. His character, 436.

Review of an Army, what the proper questions for a spectator to ask at it, 175.

Rhetorick, its ufes, 42.

9z.

han

5.

han

ome

ires

ing.

can

ope,

hes,

Mr.

ems,

rious

felf-

See

t firft

aging

8.

Rheumatism, remarks on that disorder, 188. Is the distemper of a hackney coachman or chairman, 291.

Rhone, a great difference in the manners of the people on the opposite sides of that river, 235.

Richard I. II. III. (Kings of England) their characters, 93.

Richelieu (Cardinal) what that great Minister's foible, 129. 207. A fignal instance of his refined policy, 271. 286.

Richelieu (Marshal) raised by the graces of his person and address to the highest dignities in France, 231. 258. 279. Made great progress at Hanover, in metallic learning, 357.

Richmond (Duke of) asked for the office of Secretary of State, and obtained it, 398.

Ridicule, when once accidentally fastened on any person, is with difficulty got rid of, 203. 204.

Robertson

Robertson (Dr.) his character as an historian, 354. Rebinson (Sir Thomas, afterwards Lord Grantham) accepted the office of Secretary of State with reluctance, 312.

Robinson (Sir Thomas, of Chelsea) his letters always gave Lord Chefterfield pleasure and information, 419, 450.

Rochefouenult (Duke de la) an improvement on one of his Maxims, 144. The foundation of his book defended, 161. Paints Man very exactly, 242. His Maxims should be read in a morning, and compared with real characters in the evening, One of them applied to the King of Prussia, 257. 392.

Rockingbam (Marquis of) his connexion stands fair for the ministry, 409. All his friends absolutely excluded, 417.

Roderique (Monf.) character of his Weekly Histories

Romances, in what particular the modern differ from the ancient, 66.

Rome (ancient) its history the most instructive in all antiquity, 14. A concise account of it, 15. 22.

Rome (modern) the objects of attention it furnishes, 180. 196. Character of the ladies there, 202. No good dancing-masters in that city, 218.

Remulus, some account of, 15. His mother a Vestal. 17. Killed by the Senators, ibid.

Resembagen (Parson) Lord Chesterfield declines using his interest to influence him in a point wished by Lord Sandwich, 377.

Rufus (William) why so called, 93.

Rale, what an unexceptionably uleful and necessary

one, 245.

Ruffia, character of the court of St. Petersburgh, 326. The intentions of its fovereign incomprehenfible, 332. 334. In that empire, deposing and murdering are nearly allied, 382.

Russia (Elizabeth Empreis of) what would probably be the consequences of her death, 316. That event

R

30

Sa

Sa

Si

Si

Si

Si

Si

Si

Si

Si

Sa

Se

event happened too late to be of any service to the King of Prussia, 323. Conjectures on the subject of the succession, ibid. The reasons given in her manifesto, for the march of her troops against the King of Prussia, not the true ones, 328.

Russia (Catharine II. Empress of) completed her character of a femme forte, in a manner that would have qualified her for the Heroine of Machiavel, 382.

(mi

re-

ays

on,

e of ook

42.

ng,

fair

tely

ies

rom

all a

22.

hes,

202.

Vef-fing

i by ffary

326.

ble,

S.

Sabines, the rape of their women, 17.

Saint Germain (Madame) speaks advantageously of Mr. Stanhope, 118.

Saint Germain (Marquis de) Embassador at Paris from the court of Turin, 246.

Saint Real (Abbé) author of "Don Carlos," a pretty Novel, founded in truth, 66.

Sallier (Abbé) Mr. Stanhope directed to apply to him for a tutor in geometry and aftronomy, 244.

Sandwich (Countels of) commended, 262.

Sandwich [Earl of) providentially raised up, to vindicate true religion and morality, 375. Remarkably civil and kind to Mr. Stanhope, 377. Is appointed Post-master, 417.

Sardinia (King of) a very able prince, 174.

Savary, his Dictionnaire de Commerce the best book of its kind, 239.

Savoy (House of) hath produced many great men, 181.

Saxon Heptarchy, why fo called, 93.

Saxony, queries on the state of that electorate, 144.

Its court a very gaudy one, 148.

Schaunat, his History of the Palatinate originally written in German, 203.

written in German, 303.

Schullemberg (Count) Mr. Stanhope accompanied him to the Göhr, 2°9. Came to England with King George the Second, 295.

Schwederius, his Theatrum Pretensionum an useful book to be occasionally consulted, 280.

S 6

Schwiegeldt

derably That vent Schwiegeldt (Monf.) an old friend of Lord Chesterfield, 282. 284.

Scipio, his moderation, continence, and generofity,

Scotland, united with England in the reign of James I. 93.

Sculpture, a liberal art, 198.

Secrecy, the only mystery of able men, 434.

Secret Expedition (in 1757) conjectures on its destination, 320. Its consequences, 321. Probable causes of its disappointment, 323.

Secret Expedition (in 1758) one of great force preparing, 333. Its object, 335; and consequences, 336. 343.

Secrets, are more easily to be kept than is commonly imagined, 162.

Secretary of State, what qualifications are absolutely necessary for that important office, 116. 137. In what manner it hath too frequently been filled, 152.

Self conversation, recommended by Lord Shaftesbury to all authors, 402; by Lord Chesterfield to all men, ibid.

Self love, always makes a man think himself of more importance than he really is, 323.

Servants in Livery, remarks on, 140.

Sevigné (Madame) her Letters, and those of Count Bussy Rabutin, recommended for an itinerant library, 123.

Shaftesbury (Earl of) a pretty remark of his on virtue and cleanliness, 199. A fingular anecdote of him, 300. Recommends self-conversation to all men, 372. Shepherd (James) hanged for an intention to shoot King George the First, 162. His remarkable intrepidity, ibid.

Simonetti (Madame de) a lady of the first fashion at Milan, 215.

Simulation, in what it differs from dissimulation, in the judgement of Dacon and Bolingbroke, 153.

Singularity,

Singularity, pardonable only in old Age and Retirement, 313.

Sinzendorf (Count) his character, 293.

Sixtus V. (Pope) a great, but able, knave, 153.

Slingelandt (Pensionary) was Lord Chesterfield's Friend, his Master, and his Guide, 433.

Small-talk, what it is, and where most used, 260.
Of great use in mixed companies, 239.

Socrates, on account of his virtues, all vicious people were enemies to him, 12.

Soltikow (Mons.) the Russian resident at Hamburgh, Sorbonne, the outlines of that famous Establishment, 268.

Souterkin of Wit, 175.

:

:8

y

y

e

it

10

of 11 ot

1-

at

n

3.

ı,

Spain, some account of, 84. Probability of that kingdom's declaring war against Great Britain, 360. Grossly insulted this country, 381. 383. Speaker. See Parliament.

Spectacle de la Nature, a superficial, but pretty book,

Spectator, Lord Chestersield's opinion of that work,

Speech, graceful speech an indispensable accomplishment, 156.

Stamp-duty, Lord Chestersield thought it not an object worth hazarding the disaffection of America about, 395. In his Lordship's opinion, a most pernicious measure, 396. The subject of warm and acrimonious debates in both houses, 397.

Stanbope (Mr. John) an account of his death, 170. Stanbope (Mr. Philip) travelled into Holland when only five years old, 1. Improved in his translations from the Latin, 4.41. His attention, 18. Mr. Maittaire commends his diligence, 23. 38, 39.92; and Lord Chesterfield his modesty, 44. Begins his tenth year with a different course of life and studies, 70. His unfavourable opinion of the Ladies reprimanded, 110. Unwearied application to his studies strongly urged, 92. His diction commended, commended, 92. His attention to the Greek tongue recommended, 98. His future destination pointed out to him, 113. His improvements in good-breeding commended, 118. Advice to him on dress, 120; on making remarks where he travels, 122; on letter-writing, 123; on cleanliness of person, 124; on searching into the characters of his acquaintance, 127; on the choice of friends, 128. The character given of him by Mr. Harte afforded his noble father great fatiffaction, 135. A particular attention to foreign negotiations recommended to him, 139. The only man whose destination from the beginning was calculated for the department of foreign affairs, 152. His enunciation bad, 154. 229. Master of the German language, 161. His hand-writing censured, 162. 229. 241. 247. The nature of his future expences pointed out to him, 174. His reception at Berlin, 177. Cautioned against too great an intimacy with the illiberal part of his countrymen, 182. Disordered, 185. His character, by a Venetian lady, 204. Directed to prepare himself for a seat in parliament, 205. The pleasing prospects which awaited him, 211. His accomplishments and defects contrasted, 229. His character from a friend at Paris, 242; from Monf. D'Aillon, 252; from Monf. Tollet, ibid.; from another friend at Paris, 253. Reckoned by Marcel one of his best scholars, 256. Directed to bring his mother some small present, 263; and Lady Chesterfield a snuff-box, ibid. His character, by Lord Albemarle, ibid. Confined by a fever, 271. His character, by Mons. Boccage, 276; by Mr. Pelham, 441. Lord Chefterfield's anxiety for his reception at Hanover, 283. Rules of conduct as a courtier pointed out to him, 284. Directions to him, in case his expectations at Hanover are disappointed, 285. Has an ashmatic complaint, 286. Recommended to the notice of M. Voltaire, 287. Is well received

k

1-ts

0

e i-

1-

of

y (-

n

e g f-

7.

15

e

1,

d

al

1-

t,

1,

i,

;

t,

5.

t,

d.

-

ſ.

**(-

r, ıt

-

13 0

d

at Hanover, 289. Parliamentary and foreign affairs, the two great objects of his education, 290. Advised to converse frequently, and be in company, with his superiors in age and rank, and directions where, 193. High panegyric on him by a lady at Paris, 296. His character by Count Sinzendorf and Monf. Clairaut, 297. Naturally inclined to be fat, and, being a very hearty feeder, was consequently plethoric, ibid. His great superiority, at the age of nineteen, over the generality of his countrymen, 299. Had naturally a very pleasing countenance, 301. A passage in the Old Bachelor humorously applied to him, 302. Is diftinguished at Manheim, 304. Sends Lord Chesterfield a wild boar, 305. His improvement in letter-writing commended, 307. feat in the House of Commons secured, ibid. Will be elected for Liskeard without opposition, 309. A Pyrrhonism in matters of state enjoined him, 311. His first appearance in the House of Commons, 314. His official letters approved of by Lord Holdernesse, and by the King, 318; by the Duke of Newcastle and Lord Chesterfield, 323; by Lord Hardwicke, 326. 331. The Landgrave of Hesse very civil to him, 322. Directions for his conduct on an interesting political event, ibid. Hints suggested to him, for a conserence with Monf. Soltikow, the Russian resident at Ham-The Berlin Commission for burgh, 326, 327. him the object of Lord Chesterfield's views, 331. Advised to write a concise History of the great events he had been witness to at Hamburgh, 333. Praised by the Princess of Hesse, and in consequence complimented by King George the Second and Princels Amelia, 334. Employed to forward some books to the Princess Amelia of Prussia, 336. Makes Lord Chestersield a present of some curious wine, 341. Mr. Stanhope's civilities to Lord Tichfield acknowledged by the Duke and Duchess of Portland, 345. Receives benefit

St

St

St

Si

S

S

S

from the prescriptions of Dr. Middleton, 346. Hopes to have the honour of investing Prince Ferdinand with a blue riband, 347, 348. A diffi-culty fiarted on that subject, 349. In love with a Lady of Hamburgh, ibid. 350. Lady Chesterfield discouraged from troubling him with a commission for herself, by his neglecting to execute some given by Madame Munchausen and Miss Cherwynd, 351. Boerhaave's advice to Lord Chesterfield applied to Mr. Stanhope, 353. Disappointed in his expectations of a visit to this country, 353. Some little difficulties attending his re-election in parliament got over, 359; that election cost him two thousand pounds, 384. Is appointed Envoy Extraordinary to Ratisbon, 367, 368, 369. Difficulties attending the ceremonial there, 370. Received much benesit from the advice of Dr. Maty, 377. 385. His disorder, which had been mistaken for the gout, proved to be the rheumatism, 378. Negotiation for vacating his feat in parliament, 384. Directed to consult the Dresden physicians, 385. Entertained Miss Chudleigh at Dresden, 392. baths of Suabia recommended to him, 394. rected to write often to his mother, 398. Preparing to go to the South of France, 403. 404. A feat in parliament promised him by Lord Chatham, 406. A Borough-jobber spoken to for one by Lord Chesterfield, ibid. Mr. Stanhope's complicated complaints, 419. Is disappointed of the seat in parliament, ibid. Obtains leave of absence from his post for a year, 420. Mr. Keith appointed Charge d'Affaires during his absence, ibid. His disorder a dropfy, 422. Character of his two fons, Charles and Philip, 427, 428. 430. 432.

Stanbope (Earl) impeached the Duke of Ormond, 203.

Stanbope (Mrs. Eugenia) a proof of Lord Chesterfield's esteem for her, 426, 427. His Lordship's good opinion confirmed, 428.

Stanbope (Sir William) disappointed in not receiving some fome Old Hock from Hamburgh, 334. Goes to pass a winter at Nice, 415.

16.

erffi-

a

on

en

to ta-

tle

nt

nd

ry

ng elis

it,

on ed

:r-

he

)ing

ın

6.

ef-

n-

11-

115

38 er es

d, r-

g ıe

States General, the names of the Seven Provinces which form that government, 1. Their connexion and transactions with this country render a knowledge of their constitution indispensable to a senator, 311. Some account of that government, 433. Statesmen, like Beauties, are seldom sensible of their own decay, 309.

Stephen (King of England) short account of, 93.

Stevens (Mr.) a friend of Mr. Stanhope, 195. Died of a consumption, 358.

Stormont (Lord) an encomium on, 239.

Strafford (Earl of) governed for a confiderable time the court of Berlin, 248.

Stratagem, the ridicule of a passage in that comedy commended, 298.

Strathmore (Earl of) kinsman to Lord Chestersield, 407; about marrying Miss Bowes, the richest heires in Europe, ibid.

Style, the importance of an attention to it, 203. 302. Sugar, is one of the most valuable branches of commerce, 320.

Sully (Duke of) nothing contributed more to his rife than a prudent economy in his youth, 434.

Suspicion, who the proper objects of it, 209.

Swift (Dean) his description of the Flappers in Laputa, 131. 194. An humorous observation of his, 248. A Poem of his, [since inserted in his Works,] which Lord Chestersield had in the original M.S. 287. See Pope.

Switzerland, Questions relative to its internal policy,

111. 114.

Sylphium, the great value set upon it by the Romans,

Systems, perfection the object always proposed in them, 272.

Tacitus, the studying him recommended, 106. An observation of his commended, 260.

Tarquin, some account of, 19.

Tarquin the Proud, becoming from his tyranny detestable, was expelled with all his family, 19.

Tartary, some account of, 90.

Taffe, character of his poetry, 217.

Tafte, its metaphorical fignification, 57.

Taxis (Madame de) an insolent fine lady, 282.

Teeth, directions for preferving them, 124. 182. 235. No hard substance should be used in cleaning them, 308. A sponge and warm water alone recommended, 13.

Temper, a command of it absolutely necessary, 183.

291.

Temperance recommended, 147.

Temple (Earl) Mr. Pitt would not come into office without his confent, 389. Published the particulars of that great Minister's quarrel with him, 401.

Temple (Sir William) his Letters recommended, 280. his remark on Pensionary De Witt, 283. Remarks on a negotiation which he valued himself highly upon, 433.

Tencin (Madame de) Lord Chestersield's esteem for

her, 442.

Teutonic Order, some account of, 158.

Theatre, that of Paris exceeds all others, 233. Yet both that and the English want several regulations,

Thoughts lose much of their beauty, if expressed in low, improper, and inelegant words, 92.

Time, its importance, 51. The smallest portion of it may be usefully filled up, 130. Many people lose two or three hours every day, by not taking care of the minutes, 131. Few know the true use and value of time, 133. How it should be employed, 211. 274. Very few are economists of it, 216.

Timidity.

Timidity, pernicious to a young man, 227.

Toulon, some account of, 78.

Townshend (Lord) why he never pleased as an orator, though he always spoke materially, with argument and knowledge, 205. The supposed author of a good pamphlet, 391.

Townshend (Mr. Charles) reflection on his versatility, 366. A bon mot on it, 391. Firmly engaged to Mr. Pitt, 372. To shew that he was in the Opposition, let off a speech on the Princess Carolina Matilda's portion, 375. Had the sole management of the House of Commons, 400. Soon on ill terms with Lord Chatham, 404; who could not well do without his abilities in the House of Commons, 407.

Trade, Axioms in it, 438.

Tradesman, what necessary qualifications for him, 224.

Translators, Foreign Ministers should never be under the necessity of employing, paying, or trusting them, for any European language, 285.

Travelling, its proper object, which is usually neglected by the English, 111. 130. 182. 267. 289.

What the real utility of it, 300.

Treaties, Histories of the most considerable recommended, 152. 280.

Treves (Chapter of) an affertion of that body, respecting Rhenish wine, 338.

Tribunes, their origin at Rome, 21.

Triflers, on what their attention engaged, 157.

Troy, some account of the siege of that city, 5, 6, 7.
Truth, the first duty of religion and morality, 91.

Tufana, the name of a Neapolitan woman, who invented a remarkable poison, 323.

Tullus Hostilius, some account of, 17.

Turin, an accomplished Capital, 168. Lord Chefterfield's expectations from Mr. Stanhope's stay there, 178.

Turkey in Asia, some account of, 90.

Turkish

Turkish History, the religious part excepted, not fabulous, though possibly not true, 301.

Tuscan Order, why the properest in the soundation of an edifice, 202.

V.

Valiere (Madame de) her character respectable, 256. Vanbrugh (Sir John) reflections on his Style of Building, 406.

L

I

I

Į

Vanity, unquestionably the ruling passion of Women, 250. Is the most universal principle of human action, 294.

Venice, the ministers of that state are necessarily able negotiators, 177. Remarks on that city, ibid. 178. Produced many great painters, 185. Few travellers know any thing of that intricate and fingular form of government, 185. What a frivolous policy in it, 192.

Vergy (Monf. du) made oath before the Grand Jury of Middlefex, that he was hired by Monf. du Guerchy to affaffinate Monf. D'Eon, 397. Is profecuted by the Attorney General, ibid.

Versatility, its effects on a courtier, 284.

Vices, those of adoption, of all others, the most disgraceful and unpardonable, 182. The English generally pursue the lowest, ibid. Vice is as degrading as it is criminal, 189.

Vienna, the Men there make curtesies, instead of bows, to the Emperor, 125.

Vieuwille (Mons. la) his influence on La Palatine,

Ville (Abbé de la) his character, 291.

Viner (Mr.) the only member of the House of Commons who opposed Mr. Pitt, 312. 350.

Virgil, his Description of Night, 67.

Virtu, the Pope's tafte in it censured, 220.

Virtue, to be perfectly virtuous, more than mere justice is necessary, 23. The virtues of the heart recomrecommended, 24. Virtue, sooner or later, is sure to be rewarded, 65. Resections on Virtue, 68. Whoever knows it, must love it, 134. Every virtue hath its kindred vice, and every excellence its kindred weakness, 142. The leniores Virtues more captivating than the greater, 313.

Vivacity, how far pleasing, 173.

of 6.

of

n,

C-

le

d.

W

be

1-

ry

I

0-

if-

fh

e-

of

e, n-

11-

art

n-

Understanding, the subject on which women of real beauty should be flattered, 129.

United Provinces. See States General.

Voiture, made several stanzas, full of false wit, on an accident which happened to a lady, 306.

Voltaire (Monf.) his Rome Sauvée censured by the severer critics, 274; commended by Lord Chestersield, 287. Sends Lord Chestersield his Histoire du Siecle de Louis XIV. from Berlin, 276. Remarks on that book, ibid. 287. Mr. Stanhope introduced to him, 286. Lord Chestersield advises him to write a History of the King of Prussia, 287. Character of M. Voltaire's writings, 292. His Histories of Les Croisades, and L'Esprit Humain, commended; and a performance called Micromegas (ascribed to him) censured, 297. His edition of Les Annales de l'Empire wished for by Lord Chestersield, 312. The Contes de Guillaume Vadé not worthy of him, 383.

Utrecht (Treaty of) an interesting period in the politics of this century, 280.

Vulgarity of Language, how acquired, 195.

W.

Wales, annexed to the Crown of England in the reign of Edward I. 93.

Wales (Frederick Prince of) probable consequences of his death, 248.

(George Prince of) his character, 248.

Waller (Mr. Edmund) a pretty Poem of his cited and commended, 43. Fell in love with a lady who who fung a fong of his own writing, 55. His admirable reply to King Charles II. when accused of having made finer verses in praise of Oliver Cromwell than he had bestowed on that Monarch, 446.

Wailer (Mr. --) could feldom speak without laugh-

ing, 144.

Walpole (Sir Robert) what his foible, 129. His great regularity made Business easy to him, 309. Never had a civil thing said to him, though much slattered, 434.

Waining-pan Story, the well-known one related by Bishop Burnet, proved fatal to Jacobitism, 176.

Wassender (Count) an inflance of Lord Chefferfield's attention to please that nobleman, 282. Not able to draw this kingdom into the secret treaty of 1746.

Weakness, that of every man should be humoured, 113; and attentively studied, 129. People in general will easier bear being told of their vices than their follies, 204.

Weight of Metal, a modern sea-phrase unknown to Admiral Blake, 320.

Well-bred Man described, 111. What his characteristic, 151. Seldom thinks (and never seems to think) himself slighted, 298.

Westminster School, not the seat of Politeness, 214. Weymouth (Lord) nominated Secretary of State, 417.

Tacitly consents to a request of Mr. Stanhope,

Wigs, for what purpose full-bottomed ones were contrived, 257.

Wilkes (Mr.) univerfally given up, 374. That intrepid affertor of our rights and liberties out of danger, 375. In imitation of the great men of antiquity, by going into voluntary exile, defeated his creditors and prosecutors, 380. Lost his election for London, but carried it bellow for Middlefex, 421.

William III. (King of England) some account of, 93.
Williams

Williams (Sir Charles Hanbury) his politeness to Mr. Stanhope, 151; and his friendship, 194. His Ode on the Death of a Bullanch, 154. His consequence at Dresden, 304. Melancholy proofs of his phrenzy, 339, 331, 332.

Wilmington (Lord) his case remembered, when her present Majesty's jointure was settling, 360.

Wit, may create Admirers, but makes few Friends, 285.

Wits, the conversation of those at Paris generally instructive, 251.

Walfe (Colonel) his gallant offer at Aix, 324.

Women, their whole fex should not be condemned for the faults of individuals, 110. The greatest attention due to them, 113. Their conversation contributes to the polishing of a gentleman, 117. On the subject of beauty, scarce any flattery too grofs for them to swallow, 129. 183. Improve the manners, if not the understanding, of Men, 135. Have great influence in fixing a man's fashionable character, 154. General directions for conduct respecting the Ladies, 161. To be talked to as beings below Men, and above Boys, 163. Establish or destroy every Man's reputation of good-breeding, 202. Much more like each other than Men are, 200. Veteran Women of Condition the properest persons to introduce a young man into the beau monde, 213. 218. Are not to be captivated by beauty, but by attention, 215. A man had much better talk too much to them than too little, ibid. The danger of forming disgraceful connexions among them, 233. Have great influence in Courts, 248. Entitled by prescription to great outward respect and attention, 259. In what particulars they resemble the spear of Telephus, 350. Have always had a great share in the politics of France, 436.

World. See Knowledge of the World.

Writing, it is in every man's power to write what hand he pleases, 172. 229. 241.

Y. York

Y.

York (Edward Duke of) embarks on a Secret Expedition, 338.

Yorke (Colonel) Mr. Stanhope advised to cultivate his friendship and protection, 233. 263. Is a man of business. 252.

Y-- (Sir William) by what method he attained very high employments in the state, 308.

Young people seldom know either how to love or to hate, 291. Look upon themselves to be wise enough, as drunken men think themselves sober enough, 298. Are always forgiven in carrying a fashion to an excess, but never in stopping short of it, 300.

FINIS.

a d 8. or le er er